Here's a post to rec.radio.cb in July of 1999. Some of you may remember it. Landshark posted quite regularly to the group. Just do a search at Google and you will find lots. There's no doubt it is the same

Well dana my man (or woman) I know the every mighty F.C.C. won't mess with me. I've been running power since the early 70's, and never had any problem.
Plus it's gonna be kinda hard to figure which house it is, considering that my 3 immediate neighbors all have antennas.
My original post really had nothing to do with the general population, it was about guys like Dennis, Sean, Toll-free, Painkiller, etc., etc., Hell even the Professor doesn't come out anymore to throw in his one liners.
I just hope that all the wanna-be lawyers die
the death of brain cancer or some slow debilitating disease.

I really believe the internet offers a great venue for those who otherwise may be doing great harm to some innocent souls......it is a means of therapy for some, and I'll be the first to admit that tuning in here allows me to be reminded of how truly blessed I am. It's been a long time since I was gathered in one place where a plurality of people are rude on a daily basis...kind of reminds me of a certain large city or two in the northeast.

Hope you get a great weekend out there,,,,,,dealing with some rain, but Sailfish always give great fishing. This past weekend yielded some Mackerel, Bass, a Remora, Mullet, Amberjack, Snook, a few sailcats, a single toadfish, and we saw several dolphin and manatee.

Take a ride through Niles Canyon for me....the water chutes (old dam) on the right hand side heading up into the hills make for a nice spot to chill...watch for the cars parked on the shoulder, usually can't miss it..you may just get lucky and have the place all to yourself. Have a good weekend.

LOL you say Jimmy has alot to learn? a 1/2 wave of coax(No need to specify velocity factor we all know it is taken into consideration this isn't First Grade Coax) does not mask any problems it repeats the impedance seen at the antenna. How does that mask a problem?

Ok, Genius....

What do you suppose the braid of that coax is acting as if the antenna has a pisspoor (or no) RF ground? Hrmmm??

Does the word Counterpoise come to mind?

Now, if the 1/2 wave section of coax is actually the "ground" half of your antenna, then guess where the RF is? Any clues? INSIDE YOUR VEHICLE.

If the radio THINKS it's got a good SWR, and therefore a good "match" because of the 1/2 wave of coax is acting as the other side of the antenna, that's fine and dandy to the radio, but part of the signal is being radiated inside the car, and I'd call that a "loss"...

A 1/2 wave of coax will only repeat the impedance seen at the antenna input if the antenna is a complete system in and of itself (that is, a radiator and an RF ground, or a balanced radiator). Otherwise, Mr.
GeniusIhavetomakefunofothersbydisparagingtheirsexualpreferenceeventhoughIdon'tknowwhatthat reallyissoI'mjust puttingmyownpersonalpreferencesoffonsomeoneelse, it's not repeating anything, but acting as part of the antenna system itself..

A little knowledge is dangerous. Luckily in your case, it's only dangerous to you and those whom you convince to believe your drivel.

Would it be the same if the coax was 18' ? How about 9' and you had a piss poor ground

Never saw this crazy phenomenum you are describing. you keep bringing up a 1/2 wave of coax , why would the radio think it has a good SWR, would it think it had a good swr with 13 '

Name an instance when an antenna is not a complete system in and of itself

So, 14' of coax will not act as part of the antenna system?

Yes, it is a tradional key clown belief that all posts come from one person. If they can just silence that one person then the NG will become key clown heaven. lol

Hi

I collect Teaberry Big T radios and was wondering if anyone knows how long Teaberry made them??

Thanks Keith

Of course not, alive and well.......... When I show up to wake everyone up. I moved and don't live in the Bay Area anymore, but the radio is virgin where I'm at, so I'm still breaking in the newbies. I talked to Mikey last night, all is well at his home. He bought a couple motorcycles,
I told him to get rid of them, they'd kill him.
Not Where you were the last time I talked to you on the radio (on my way to Tahoe)?
E mail me direct you burnout, you can figure

I really believe the internet offers a great

great harm to some innocent souls......it is a means of therapy for some, and I'll be the first to admit that tuning in here allows me to be reminded of how truly blessed I am. It's been a long time since I was gathered in one place where a plurality of people are rude on a daily basis...kind of reminds me of a certain large city or two in the northeast.

Given: A radio with an impedance of 50 ohms, transmission line with a characteristic impedance of 50 ohms, and an antenna with a load impedance of 36.5 ohms.

Question: How long of a coax is needed to match the antenna to the radio?

Since a transmission line transformer can only transform impedances and cannot reduce or eliminate reflected power, I doubt your claim very much.

You said that you could only get your SWR down when using 18' of coax. Maybe I'm missing something, but it sounds like the same thing to me. But what you don't know is that your SWR never changed because your reflected power never changed, and that's because your antenna/coax mismatch never changed.

> Length of coax DOES change the impedance seen by the radio.

Only if there is a load mismatch, and the apparent impedance will never equal the characteristic impedance of the transmission line. That requires matching the radio to the apparent impedance, which is what I assume you tried to do with that variable cap. That's called a 'conjugate match', and is all fine and dandy (even if it isn't the best, or even the simplest, way to accomplish the same thing). But if it really is a conjugate match you wouldn't be limited to 18' of coax as you claim.

> If
>you dont understand the difference you have a lot to learn. The name of the

The problem originates when there is a mismatch between the load and the transmission line. Nothing you can do will reduce or eliminate the reflected power if you don't reduce or eliminate the mismatch. THAT'S the "name of the game".

> Any feedline will transform the impedance of an antenna for better

Ok. So?

Wrong. It does not change the mismatch at the antenna, does not change the amount of reflected power or SWR, and therefore does not improve anything. But it -does- have a purpose, which I will repeat for the umpteenth time in this newsgroup:

The reason 18' is recommended is because the outside of that length of coax is 1/2 wavelength. That means the RF ground on one end will be RF ground at the other, and hopefully one end of the system is RF grounded. If both ends are grounded, it doesn't matter at all how long you cut your coax, and you are going to read the same SWR regardless of the length. But the fact is that many CBers don't properly ground their radios and/or antennas, and some antennas don't use a ground at all. Now if you change the length of your coax and the SWR changes, then one or both ends of your coax is not properly grounded. You might ask why the SWR meter would show different readings with different coax lengths just because one end isn't grounded? Because that situation puts RF on the shield, and SWR meters are not designed to work when the shield is not grounded. So 18' puts the meter (shield) at RF ground, regardless of which end is grounded, the meter works, and everyone is happy even if they have a bad ground.

So does that clear up what's happening with your system?

> As far as

Transmission line transformers have indeed been used for a very long time. But they CANNOT reduce or eliminate reflected power/standing waves. The ONLY way to do that is to reduce or eliminate the load mismatch. Maybe you are confusing impedance with reflected power....

>Yes there is a myth that triming coax will effect SWR but I NEVER said that.
>Seems you like to read and see what you want to see instead of what is >really there.

The best solution is usually the simplest, and that is to properly ground both ends, tune the antenna, and don't sweat a slight mismatch. If you absolutely must have a 1:1 SWR, then address the source of the problem instead of compensating for the effect: i.e, match the antenna to the transmission line!

Here is the story:

I went to the "only" shop left in San Diego.
I received an education regarding my setup
Nothing wrong with a "mag mount" if used with the right antenna.
I had a 4' Firestick II
I was told that was:
1) A no-no with a mag mount....
2) A no-no positioned on the top of the "cab" (roof of my pickup truck)

If I ï¿½mustï¿½ have only a mag mount.....
Then he suggested a Wilson 1000 (mag mount version) ï¿½bottom loadï¿½ is the way to go on the roof (radiates along ground plane ï¿½roof- not ï¿½Up to the MOONï¿½ like what happens with the Firestick)

He should me a diagram he drew on a napkin.
He told me to not worry about SWR. He checked it with a portable Field
Strength Meter just hooked up to the antenna.
Right out of the box it was 1.1-1 to 1.4-1 across almost 2mhz of range.

He said ï¿½do not change anythingï¿½

I was told this will receive better and transmit better.
When I left and turned the radio on, I could receive better. It talked better (according to feedback) than before too.
With this radio/meter setup in the truck it still shows 1.6-1 to 2.5-1 across the 40 channels. He said that was deceiving and not to worry about it.
I am still going to change my ï¿½Rat Shackï¿½ patch cables to some I am making myself with some LR-240 I have and soldering pl-259s. I will be getting a TFC-3001 by the end of the week so I will be able to see if just changing the meter OR cables make a difference.

It almost seems like ï¿½blind faithï¿½ to just go by the MJF meter readings he gave me (I saw it and it looked GREAT) and disregard the SWR reading I am getting inside.
I do have a resistance meter. Since these cables are 50ï¿½. Where/how do I measure that ?

I remember reading that BNC (Bayonet/ old 10base2) connectors are closer resistance than PL-259/SO-239 combos are...??
Donï¿½t they use those mostly for HAM? Why not for 10/11 meter?

The resistance checking questions are so I can check my cables/connections myself to see if there is a issue somewhere. Also to be able to check my cables from time to time.

Thanx,

It doesn't matter what brand of antenna you use, a mag-mount necessarily means that you have a poor ground plane because your counterpoise is the coax, not the truck.

Now I don't like either company, but that's a load of rat droppings!

>He should me a diagram he drew on a napkin.

Remember when I said to pick up a copy of the ARRL handbook? Did you even consider taking my suggestion? Or is your literacy confined to napkin art?

>He told me to not worry about SWR. He checked it with a portable Field
>Strength Meter just hooked up to the antenna.

A field-strength meter doesn't 'hook up' to the antenna -- you place it a fixed distance away from the antenna (because you are measuring the 'field', hence the name) and make comparisons while adjusting your system.

>Right out of the box it was 1.1-1 to 1.4-1 across almost 2mhz of range.
>He said ï¿½do not change anythingï¿½

Then that was an SWR meter, not a field-strength meter. BTW, CB radio only covers about 0.5 MHz of bandwidth. Are you breaking the law there, too? Better be careful about which channel you pick, those hammies get mighty upset when you freeloaders intrude on their 10-meter band.

>I was told this will receive better and transmit better.
>better (according to feedback) than before too.

Power of suggestion. If he really knew what he was doing he would have demonstrated the difference with a 'real' field-strength meter, and then you would have objective proof of the difference, not an enthusiastic perception of improvement after buying a brand new antenna. (You would be shocked at how many people strap magnets onto their fuel lines and 'think' their cars run so much better than before.)

>With this radio/meter setup in the truck it still shows 1.6-1 to 2.5-1 >across the 40 channels. He said that was deceiving and not to worry about

With 400 watts forward, an SWR of 2.5:1 means you are reflecting over 70 watts back into your amp. That can be a serious problem. You should visit another shop to verify his statement, or get it checked out by a ham that won't turn you into the FCC.

>It almost seems like ï¿½blind faithï¿½ to just go by the MJF meter readings he

Yes, it is "blind faith". Get it checked by someone that knows what they are doing.

>I do have a resistance meter. Since these cables are 50ï¿½. Where/how do I >measure that ?

You can't. When you are talking about coax, the 50 ohms is a measurement of its "characteristic impedance", which is the impedance at which RF propogates through the line. Also, 'impedance' used here is the ratio of volts to amps, and is not 'resistance'.

>I remember reading that BNC (Bayonet/ old 10base2) connectors are closer >resistance than PL-259/SO-239 combos are...??
>Donï¿½t they use those mostly for HAM? Why not for 10/11 meter?

Don't worry about the impedance of the connectors -- any mismatch will be so slight that not only will you not notice it, it's probably not even measurable.

>The resistance checking questions are so I can check my cables/connections >myself to see if there is a issue somewhere. Also to be able to check my >cables from time to time.

The only thing you can check on a coax cable with an ohmmeter is shorts and opens. If you want to check for quality, what you need is an 'impedance bridge'.

In many cases some manufacturers use that wattage figure. In reality it is INPUT power, rather than output power. Many handhelds atre famous for listing input power. Also, in some cases, AUDIO output to the spaeker is used as the wattage figure. You want a unit that has 4 watts output power, which is the legal max.

Did you mean Swr meter? Field strength meters have nothing to do with Swr.
2mhz is a pretty big swath of bandwidth, you sure about that too?

He said "do not change anything"

I was told this will receive better and transmit better.

It might be better than the mag mount with a Firestick, but not better than mounting it in a permanent position in the body.

When I left and turned the radio on, I could receive better. It talked better (according to feedback) than before too.

Yes it will work better than before, but the Firestick mounted in the body of the truck would've worked better than the mag mount set up.

With this radio/meter setup in the truck it still shows 1.6-1 to 2.5-1 across the 40 channels.

2-5-1 is workable, but still way high, you are losing power when operating in that range.

He said that was deceiving and not to worry about it.

Well good luck Steve, what most have said here is true, the Firestick would work better if mounted into the body of the truck. Wilson's work good, but a Firestick, Quad Wound & S.S. whip work a whole lot better than them.

If you read what I wrote, the situation has already been named, but ok.. I'll be more succinct, JUST FOR YOU.

If the body of the vehicle is fiberglass, and no ground wire (or an insufficient ground wire) has been run. If the braid of the coax has no good connection to the body of a metal vehicle at the antenna. If the antenna is a magnet mount with poor capacitive coupling to ground.
Need more examples?

What's that got to do with a discussion about antennas... You forgot to include all the terms that SHOULD have come to mind, yet again..
Trucker, with an Extra class HAM ticket, who's got a college degree in Computer Science and Electrical Engineering, who's resume blows yours out of the water, and who drives the truck he owns because he enjoys it.

Yep, it would.. but the point here isn't the length of the coax.. it's the fact that the coax isn't part of the transmission line any more in this case, but part of the antenna system.

That depends on the installation and the velocity factor of the coax.
If you haven't seen it before (and it's not crazy.. it happens all the time), then you don't really have the experience to be talking in this venue.

When the feedline and the antenna aren't completely decoupled from each other... in other words, when the antenna isn't balanced, or doesn't have an efficient counterpoise (without the coax) to work against.

Use your brain for once.. of course it will.. The difference is, with 14' of coax (or any length other than a 1/2 wave section), the problem will actually show up to those who don't know what they're looking for, so they can troubleshoot and fix the actual problem, and not mask it.

Unfortunately the little tutorial does not explain what happens with the impedfance of the load is significant smaller than the impedance of the tx which is usually the case in mobile CB. It craps up your modulation. Back when AM was prevalent on the ham bands the books used to explain this. Since SSB took over I havent seen it so much anymore. Dont belive me ,try it some time with a 25 ohm dummy load and a modulation monitor(scope type). By using 18ft of coax it places the impedance seen by the radio above 50 ohms. The impedance match to the radio is no better its just greater than 50 which is inherently better than being below 50. What has made most people not understand why using 18ft of coax on your mobile radio is a good idea is because the usual explanation for doing it is WRONG. It has nothing to do with SWR. Obviously you drink from the SWR well too.

BTW: The Federal Avaiation Administration also reccomends using feedline length of odd multiples of 1/4 wavelength with there AM fixed tuned air to ground radios per there hand book 6100.15B. They give the same explantion for doing this as I do. You should choose your reading a little better or get some one to explain it to you.

No length of coax will make the RATIO any better. An odd multiple of 1/4 wl will place the impedance seen by the radio above 50 ohms by the same ratio it was out by before, check previous post for explanation why this is better. If you have a generator and the load on it will never be exactly right for optimum output had you rather overload it or underload it? Same idea.

If there is a 3:1 mismatch It would be better to find the rust connection that is causing the mismatch. A 3 to 1 SWR mean the impedance of the antenna is either 17 or 150 ohms. I never seen mobile CB antennas normally have this impedance and something not be wrong. I know you have a CB shop, It is correct for me to gather that you think this could be normal. Only with one of magmount rubber duck antennas.

YOU clipped everything I just said so you want to agrue with out listening to my explanation. Length of cable has nothing to do with SWR. You would have to know whether the antenna is a resonance or not. You would have to know whether the impedance seen by the radio is above or below 50 ohms. If its not at resonance I would adjust the length of the antenna. If it is causing the modulation to be less than optimum I would would make sure the coax length is an odd multiple of a 1/4wl. So I guess my answer is none of the above. Obviously you put a lot of thought to your question.LOL

Wrong, If you belive what you said!!!!! SWR is the impedance mismatch between the load, antenna and coax, It has nothing to do with the transmitter. It is you my friend who really needs to study. I never said

If you read the book I pointed out to you, you would know standing waves only occur in unterminated antennas. If the antenna is terminated, they are traveling waves.

SWR is Standing Wave Ratio.

I can't read what you type without laughing my ass off. We get about one guy a year who refuses to look at the information out there. You are the one this year. Thanks for the entertainment.

Speaking of studying, I have here, Practical Antenna Handbook, 3rd ed, Joseph J. Carr; The Complete RF Technician's Handbook, 2nd ed, Cotter W. Sayre. Also the 2001 ARRL Handbook. @ 621.382

I'll believe them before I believe you.

I was thinking the same about you? What a clown You dont terminatre antennas unles they are a special kind that requires it like a rhombic. You are confusing standing waves on the antenna with standing waves on the line.
Antennas are considered terminations!!!. Antennas are suppose to have standing waves on them. Youve looked at the book but dont understand a word of it. You are a great example of a little knowledge being a dangerous thing

It's called the Channel Guard by CBCI. It provides improved ACR (Adjacent Channel Rejection) by enhancing the IF filtering of the radio. I have one installed in my 10-meter rig with rather good results. It is NOT DSP (Digital Signal Processing) though. Hope that helps. Here's the link:

Your IP address is 172.200.121.132 and fagsharks was 172.200.121.132, maybe you should disconnect and then reconnect before you change

ok thanks

If the body of the vehicle is fiberglass, your saying 18' of coax will make it work like a champ? And 12' it won't work?

> If the braid of the coax has

Ok, this is a malfunction and not how a antenna is set up so your saying use 18' of coax in case your braid breaks loose or you have a poor installation.

>If the antenna is a magnet mount with poor capacitive coupling to ground.

What size is the magnet? How does the magnet have poor coupling to ground?

Yes you named problems then seem to infer 18' of coax will aid the swr of a poor installation or stupidity of mounting a antenna on a fiberglass body with no ground. at

How will the problem show up at 14' and not 12' i thought at 12' the impedance repeats itself

I picked the right week for dam spillover. It was not spilling last week, according to others there. Took lots of pictures. They will be up soon. I was told the trail leading below the dam was muddy. If it doesn't rain tonight or in the morning, I will put on my hiking boots and take the low road. 43 billion gallons of water. Can I wash my Jeep yet? I believe I heard reports the city's other two reservoirs are full as well. Last time I saw water over this dam, not all the "steps" were flowing, in 1995.

I took a 2 meter antenna, and trimmed it to 18.5 inches for MURS
(181.82 MHz)

What length of coax should I use assuming garbage RG-58 foam?

a) 18 feet
b) multiples of 2.14 feet
c) multiples of 4.28 feet
d) the length from point a to point b + a little slack

Depends on what you want the antenna impedance presented to the radio to do.
If you want it to read the same as what's presented to the other end of the coax, then an even number of half-wavelengths. Otherwise, you're just rotating the complex part of the impedance around.

If it was me:
1: Make the antenna resonant.
2: Match the antenna impedance to the feedline through low loss components.
3: Use enough feedline to get you there, plus a little slack.

Do I take velocity factor into account? (.66 in this case)

Jimmy says to use 1/4 wavelength multiples?

Hello Scott:

I believe that RG-58C was engineered and designed to wrap up branches and such for the Trash Man. It has a funny appeal all wrapped around a drive shaft tho.

Suggest you choice #D and use LMR400 Coax, less insertion loss, will last much longer, not get water logged, and women will adore you. Probably get your picture on the front of QST Magazine, which hot chicks all over ya's.

Yeah....

I use 9913f I know LMR400 is better but In most applications 0.1 attenuation per 100 Feet isnt going to to be any noticible difference. Now Brand plays a major factor. That shit from cableexperts.com is garbage compared to belden. I never used or saw Times Microwave Systems coax.

Hello Carl,
The specs are shown(PDF file) for the 2nd and 3rd harmonic content and were measured with a Hewlett Packard model #7000 spectrum analyzer (chassis with appropriate modules). The fifth harmonic is not of consequence as it's perhaps 15-20dB down from the 2nd or 3rd. Spurious emissions were not made because the necessary notch filter to suppress the fundamental were not readily available.

Hey guys I got this thing out and working but I have a question. When I turn the squelch knob all the way to the left I hear static but will recieve. But if I am listning in and turn the squelch to the right when I turn the knob past a certain point I wont hear anything at all is this working properly or is there a problem. I have a trc-222. Its a 40 channel 5 watt cb I believe. Also I am just starting out so could anyone give me advise about starting conversation etc.

Thanks

First, I have no CB shop... lol
A 3:1 match doesn't necessarily mean something is wrong. Not all antenna mounting situations are optimum and this magnitude of mismatch is quite common. The bottom line is... it's nothing to get all worked up about. The matcher can easily dial a match like that totally flat. As we discussed before, a match like this (or even worse) can make the losses incurred by the in-line matcher really easy to take! you may lose 10% with the matcher... and gain 25% by reducing the reflections... an overall gain of 15% from doing nothing! Of course, flattening the match without the matcher is best... but sometimes not easy to do!

Jay,

Better send him the velocity factor, etc. for the lower loss stuff. I'm just waiting for the usual flames to appear. I sent Scott some information - but based it upon the RG-58 (which can range considerably in velocity factor based upon whether it is foam or not). Jay, you've got some nice antennas you're building, but I suspect you could make more buck$ if you could sell some chill pills for some of our more ... ummm ... 'outspoken' folks :)

Hey, what did you expect from somebody who paid $4.95, and two proof

I can assure you that changing good quality coax, RG-58 or otherwise, does not affect the audio quality. I've used RG-58, RG-8, Teflon mini coax, etc.
on AM, FM, SSB on different bands and I don't hear one bit of difference.
Nor does any of the stations I QSL with report any difference in audio quality.

Poor routing and choice of wire for the speaker connections most likely is where some of the difference is found. Also did you switch speakers or mics etc? Also the band conditions may have changed between the times you made the switch leading you to an incorrect conclusion. Also some communications
mics have a selector switch that changes the frequency response too.
If
yours has one maybe it got changed while you were using it. Many communication mics have a peak of around 6 to 10 db at 2KHz. The 2KHz frequency is where the ear is most sensitive, and where most of the "intelligence" is found in the audio spectrum. With a peak like the above

it would sound a bit "tinny" on the air.

That is the insulation material you see between the center pin of the

Try a real mobile antenna. You just can't get out portable on 27 MHz. Go on a tall hill with an FRS. <:

Low band CB needs a big antenna.

Any length that is convent. I do wonder what you mean by "garbage RG-58 foam" coax. The losses at VHF are much higher than at 11m you know. If you use old corroded coax that cable may end up being a good dummy load that happens to have an antenna on the end of it. 8-((

Its good, and some what expensive. Many serious Ham V/UHFers use it in place of the Belden 9913. The larger sizes, like LMR-600 and LMR-900, have really low loses at low UHF. The problem is getting connectors installed!

You will hear something so long as the signal is stronger than where you set the squelch at. It isn't a real big advantage on HF, but on VHF (MURS) and UHF (FRS), it keeps your sanity and will open up when you have some kind of understandable signal. (it does apply to 27 MHz, but usually there is a ton of either atmospheric noise or a lot of stations buried under the noise they create. This can make it difficult to set the squelch so that it opens at times you would like it to)

A good brand of connector that you will commonly find is made by a company called Amphenol. Just look for the connectors that use the white colored insulation, called Teflon or TFE. The other types, using the brown colored insulation, like mica-filled phenolic, you may get away with but I don't recommend it.

That's nothing, where I'm from. Every spring it floods. Dikes were built to the height of fifty feet. Most of the time, flood waters would rise to around forty two to forty five feet. About fifteen feet above flood stage. But one spring, the dikes broke. Flooding three quarters of the town in water. That spring there were record flood levels that reached fifty four feet. Now that's alot of water.

Jim, there is a local repeater that is connected to IRLP. I heard a guy in Rochester one night. He didn't have your call. Love scanners!!!

Well you've staggered into the troll zone..............
We have had a couple of trolls infest this group for the past three years, kind of like cockroaches, they just won't die.

Landshark

Now watch as one of them will respond under two or three different screen nics and accounts, harass, accuse, foul language the works.

Scott,

I've only used VE7DTM to talk to a friend in Quesnel, British Columbia, using Echo Link. My contacts in Australia, England, and other points N,S,E, and W of the boarders were via all rf paths. Of course, if you get your ticket, you can call me via the WB2KAO repeater here in Rochester as I often monitor 444.850 FM. Yeah, there was one guy pushing about the need for CW. Hit 'em with about 40 WPM. Fortunately, Tim, the repeater owner, has no problem with that either ... :)
There may be one or two brain-deads around here that are trying the sex stuff on a group I moderate. Doesn't work. Usually, I leave approvals to the group owner - but I don't have a problem pulling the trigger and banning 'em right up front. The newsgroup may put up with this junk, but I don't. Accusations are cheap. Let 'em put their money where their mouth is. Talk is cheap; good whiskey costs money :) BTW, what repeater do you monitor?

How far have you done simplex on 440. I still like the fact I did over 7 miles on a $10 FRS radio.

Whichever one catches my scanner first. I've noticed kerchunks come in bunches.
Someone goes and hits 4 or 5 about once an hour. After I separated my stations by 2 meters or 440, I noticed that someone does it on 440 also. Hmmmmmmmmm...

Yes George, you are obsessed with me & other men.

Landshark

Again, George has shown his colors. Just like he always does, when people don't respond or start saying they are kill filing them, he changes screen nics, just like this one.

Yeah but Steve, George has been proven to post from AOL, Verizon among other ISP's using hundreds of different screen nics, just to troll rec.radio.cb harass, accuse, use foul language, hatred type of posts for over three years now.

Yes, so he does use his Comcast account with his web portal onto AOL.

Ah, no... the number of ELECTRICAL HALF WAVE lengths of coax is not important. You can have ODD or EVEN. If we were talking QUARTER WAVE, then you would want odd multiples.

BTW, its 151.820 and not 181.820 :-)

The answer to the original question is "F" for all intent and purposes.

Cable Xperts' cable is supposed to be pretty good.

I myself just bought a 500' spool of LMR400 and a bunch of silver/teflon PL259s and N-Connectors!

Times Microwave is better than Belden (IMHO). Times Microwave has been a supplier for the US Navy for years! They make great cable!

Here is what you said, and I quote: "... Oh yes, I had to use 18 ft of coax to get my built in tuner to work right ." The fact is, and I guess I have to say this even one more time for it to sink in, that your "tuner" should have 'worked' with any length of coax if your radio and antenna were properly grounded. One or both of them are not, therefore you need that magical length of 18 feet in order to get correct SWR measurements, and even then it's not that accurate.

It's not better (or worse) by any means. First, a high impedance seen at the radio means that the final must work at a higher voltage for the same amount of power. That doesn't work too well because it starts clipping when you run out of supply voltage (i.e, it will "squash your modulation", which is what you claim a low impedance will do), as well as stressing the final and modulation amps beyond their intended operating conditions. Second, a low impedance demands more current, stressing not just your final and modulation amps, but can also distort the output by upsetting the bias of the final. Third, by changing the output impedance of the radio you are creating a mismatch between the radio and the transmission line (this mismatch occurs REGARDLESS of the apparent impedance, because the output power meets the coax -before- it has a chance to be reflected at the antenna). This antenna/coax mismatch, just like any other mismatch, will reflect power right back into the source (the final). So not only are you backwards in your interpretation of the effects of high and low impedance, you are creating more problems than you are solving.

> If you have a generator and the load on it will never be exactly >right for optimum output had you rather overload it or underload it? Same >idea.

Judas Priest, how many times do I have to say this: The "load" is the same regardless of the impedance -- you pump X watts into a load, and if there is a mismatch you will reflect Y watts back to the source. If your coax is 50 ohms, it doesn't matter if your load is 25 ohms or 100 ohms, it will reflect the same amount of POWER back to the source. It doesn't matter if that power is mostly current or mostly voltage, the POWER is the same, and so is the damage if there is too much of it.

2nd harmonic = -33 dBc @ 100W CW
3rd harmonic = -30 dBc @ 100W CW

Those figures aren't particularly good. For a 180W amp, they can only be worse at rated power. I would also like to see what happens at different levels of modulation. Also, your numbers suggest that there is no filtering at all, which makes me suspect the next statement is based only on speculation:

> The fifth harmonic is not of consequence as it's >perhaps 15-20dB down from the 2nd or 3rd.

Without filtering you could have a mighty big spike just about anywhere up the spectrum. And since it's a push-pull, you have to pay just as much attention to even harmonics as you do to odd harmonics.

> Spurious emissions were not made >because the necessary notch filter to suppress the fundamental were not >readily available.

That doesn't suprise me.

But I have noticed that you have made several improvements to your design in the past couple years. So just to be fair, I'll tell ya what I'll do: I'll run one of your amps through a few bench tests at no charge and post the results. If it performs as you claim then you will have public confirmation by the harshest critic of cheap amps in this newsgroup -- me. And you can even post my comments on your website (in context, of course). But if it doesn't perform to specs, or if there is a significant omission from your specs, that will be posted as well.

I'll limit the tests to the following:

Spurious emissions and harmonics up to 300MHz @ 13.8VDC, 28MHz, 180W RMS output, and input modulations of 0, 50, 80 & 100%. Also:

Output power vs frequency @ 4W RMS and 12W PEP input;
Heatsink temp vs transistor case temp vs time (max duty cycle);
RF supression at power supply input.

So how much confidence do you have in your design? Do we have a deal?

It is a good antenna. Pros: Good ears, very low angle of radiation and no coil. Cons: Bleeds like crazy, power input limited by small coax. I stopped at about 2500 watts.

: The specs are shown(PDF file) for the 2nd and 3rd harmonic content and were : measured with a Hewlett Packard model #7000 spectrum analyzer (chassis with : appropriate modules). The fifth harmonic is not of consequence as it's : perhaps 15-20dB down from the 2nd or 3rd. Spurious emissions were not made
: because the necessary notch filter to suppress the fundamental were not
: readily available.

A couple of things to note...

First off, most anyone worth their amplifier designing salt, living in the real rf world would/should include even a measure of simple low pass (or along similar lines) filtering. Regardless of the class of service, basic Engineering/designing screams for low pass filtering on this type of amplifier.

The fly in your technical soup is the dbc measured harmonics using CW. Living in the real world, I'll bet this type of amplifier is used less than 2% in CW applications. The true story is the near 100% modulated spectral display.

What you really need to do... is to pipe a single or even better two-tone signal through the amplifier, then check the output at rated power. I'm more than sure your posted specs are going to fly out the window.

One must always pay attention to the fine print...

It's crazy not to include a simple low pass filter with your circuit. The construction looks pretty nice now, why not finish the job right?

Moparholic,
The maximum power is still the same it's ever been, they just changed 'where' it's measured. It's determined by output power rather than input power now. Read the 'fine' print, that 7 watts is audio power.

Good antenna. Mostly came in 1/2 wave although there were a limited number of 5/8 wave units produced. Good piece for its time but a little noisy for the neighbors.

Thanks, but this is a speaker with some circuitry inside the case, not a receiver modification. I now learn this one was purchased at a Radio Shack in N. California. The RS in Texas no nothing about such an item. Research continues.

Interesting about the neighbors. I never really thought about it until reading the comments in this thread. We have not had the neighbor problem since replacing the Starduster with the A99 in 1990... same coax and tripod even. The Starduster put the signal through almost every TV & radio next door, the A99, zilch. They perform about the same at distance, though, maybe a slight edge to the A/S Starduster. I guess the more amazing part is that the coax is still working !

The specs once called for a maximum input power to the final amplifier in a transmitter. This was (usually) the voltage on the output device times the current. I say usually because, depending upon the final amplifier, it might also require including the power to the driver stage. It is much easier to simply state a maximum output power (and easier to figure out too).

Yes folks, the ORIGINAL 3-Ring'ed Circus Master of late night AM Radio will be hosting Coast to Coast AM this evening and Friday. (5/29 & 5/30)

Expect all you favorite guests to pay a visit, including the "Face on Mars" shill meister himself...the one and only Richard Hoagland!

Get those tinfoil hats and leftover Y2K Baygen windup radios ready boys!

Forget about Tommy Toobs and the other late nite JO's on the upper half of the 75 Meter ham bands! This will be MUCH MORE FUN to listen in on.

(perhaps Wayne Green will call in too???)

You still didn't get it right.

I squared times R

Or

I * E

E = I * R R = E / I I = E / R

P = I * E I = P / E E = P / I

Live it. Learn it. Know it.

I got an old CB at a yard sale, hooked it up and listen to static for 2 days (chan 19). Just when I was ready to throw it out thinking it was broken, I heard loud and clear a couple of guys. So that's it, no traffic exept for a couple of seconds every other day? I'm just south of boston,ma less then a mile from I95.

Radio Shack sold a DSP external speaker cat #210-0543. I don't know when it was discontinued. Probably before they became a bad cell phone store. The manual is still available online.

i guess i really dont care. if you dont feel like its me ask mark aka shitpants@webtv.net or jim Kp920 who are both news group regulars, i've contacted both recently and they can vouch for me. this is just my new aol name. it isnt the first time it's changed and likely wont be the last over the years. this post is not from google, newsdawg or anything else other than AOL like all my post over the years have been. now ive gone 10-7 from this group for long periods of time before more than once but never have i been missed as much as now. i'm flattered. now i ask again has then been a fake me posting while i was gone?

yeah well I knew the REAL tim nebo, and youre no tim nebo.

first of all, tim would never use 580, he goes on 555 or 640.
second there would be some mention of his stable of fine ass available to him 24/7.
third he would fire up some rightous bud instead of posting.

Wecome back Tim. There have been some changes while you have been 10-7. Twist is now the main man with Jim giving the tech advice handling amp questions and such. Not much of old crowd Jay, Ice, ipo and concrete bump it down, Toll not active herebut still lurking in the shadow. Professor still hawking that sky wave. George the only anti left and Landshark be working a plan to end that right now. Numbers to ya and peace out.

I was just given a mint condition Royce 1-621 base radio (My mom found it in her basement and was going to toss it) and was wondering, Are these worth anything nowdays and are they easy to add channels to? Would like to add the lower 40 to it or even just a few channels woiuld be great. I have yet to hook it up and see if it work. Anyways, Anyone have any good mods for this radio?

It looks nice at at my radio station with all my other gear so I think it will be a keeper.

Shut up yourself, Georgie-girl. At least Scott attempted to answer the question; something you never bother to do. All you ever do is troll and make trouble. Why don't you go play with the hambos instead of lurking in a CB newsgroup? Won't the hams talk to you? I wonder why!

At this point in the sunspot cycle, Sorin, CB is gonna sound like that. It's either going to be S9 signals on every channel or nothing.
However, right near Boston and hearing nothing indicates that either the coax cable to your antenna is no good or the "front end" RF transistor is shot. Either way, Scott was right on the money.

If you want a really good one, you can check with any local mobile radio shop, such as supplies equipment to police, fire and commercial radio users. I got a used 10 watt GE amplified speaker for $20. They even put a plug on it for me at that price. The speaker has a volume control on it and is about 4 by 8 inches and sounds much better than the radio shack ones.

It's more like hooking up a walkie talkie to a linear amp to a base station antenna, with a power supply plugged into the wall. You could'nt squeeze that much power out of a 9volt battery or even a bunch of AA batteries. The wattage wouldn't add up...25 watts,,,more like 2 and a half watts....

You'd think for 180 million, we would have some kind of relief pitching.
Instead, we have the relievers from the local CYO team. Fuck, my over-30 team has better relief pitching. The payroll is probably closer to 150 million according to USA today. Next year we lose a ton of payroll to Clemens, Well, Mondesi, Hitchcock, Ziele, Ventura. So, I assume they will buy some pitching and a 3B.

That's where you're wrong...

The radio output is 50 ohms impedance.
The coax is 50 ohms impedance (if you're not a dumbass using the wrong coax, that is).

What you need to find out is whether the antenna input is 50 ohms impedance or not. You do this at the base of the antenna, with an analyzer.

Another point that you're wrong about... Low SWR DOES NOT mean the antenna is resonant. It means it's providing a load that's close to the output load of the radio and the impedance of the coax. Just because the load is close in impedance doesn't mean you're guaranteed that the antenna is resonant.

See:
http://search.netscape.com/redir.adp?appname=MS&query=when%2blow%2bswr%2bis%2bbad&url=http%3a%2f%2fwww%2eqsl%2enet%2fw8kea%2fmeetings%2f020103%2freflections%2ePDF&datasource=Google&partner=Google&clickedItemRank=1&requestId=cns14044&component=websearch.google.http.tcl&searchType=MS&clickedItemType=MS&brand=NSCP&query=when%2blow%2bswr%2bis%2bbad&view=nscp_portal&channel=nscp_portal&source=NSCPRedirect&invocationType=-

And that's just one example. I once had a link to an article entitled "When Low SWR is Bad." I can't seem to find the frelling link.. When I do, I'll post it. It makes for interesting reading.

At any rate, don't fall into "gotta have a 1:1 match" hole.. It's not always the best thing, as evidenced by the 1/4 wave SS whip example.

No.. you're wrong...

The transmitter has an output impedance. If the output impedance of the transmitter equals the impedance of the transmission line (feedline, coax, whatever you want to call it) and equals the input impedance of the antenna, then you have 1:1 SWR. If you think the output impedance of the transmitter has no effect on the SWR reading, then you're the one who's sorely, sorely mistaken.

I never said you said changing the length of the coax would change anything.. I was filling in some gaps in the "theory" that's been thrown around in here... of course, those who are stuck in their ways will remain just that... stuck.

SWR affects your modulation? Really? Hrm.. Guess we need to find antennas that will help with our modulation now...

Only on FM. On AM they can spaz when they are overdriven, but that rarely happens even with an amp, and typically they read the tx freq fairly accurately.
Did you do something stupid and get your radio modified? Because that's what happens when some moron with an arc welder and internet access gets their dirty little fingers into your radio -- they don't have enough brains to re-align the VCO so the control voltage can sweep through the entire bandwidth. So what radio did you get hacked? I hope it wasn't expensive.

On Radio counters will NOT change unless you have a voltage problem.
In Line Counters will change even with factory stock radios on AM or SSB.

back to "Holier than thou" attitude, everyone is "illegal", basically trolling. I thought you said that

Yes it is doing 950 watts on my bird 43 peak meter. I never said it was used on CB. You are assumming it was used on CB. If you are not fimiliar with the Palomar 300A. It has this knob called a band knob. Which makes the amplifier work on 40, 20.15, and 10 meters.
I am sure the next thing your going to say then why did you post it in the cb news group. I knew there are hams in here.I figured someone would be interested in it.

Do a route from Allentown, NJ to Philly. He's not in Pa he's some place south/southeast of Allentown, NJ. You guys could be beer drinking buddies.

According to his call sign, he is in Allentown. And I am not in Philly. I did a direct route. 75 miles. And as for drinkiing with him, see what is has already done to him? He is a fat section 8 piece of shit on public assistance.

Don't believe everything you hear. He lives in a very nice area with quite expensive houses. Do a trace on where he is posting from, its not PA. Also he's not section 8, I think he is quite an intellgent person, who just loves screwing with you guys. So far he's doing a pretty good job of that.

At almost 250 alleged watts out of a 6KD6 (which is rated at 33 watts plate dissipation), I don't think those watts lie along the real number line. I think those watts are on the line in quadrature with real numbers ... :)

They are fairy-tale watts Frank. I looked up the 6KD6 in my Sylvania technical tube manual. The relevant spec's for that tube are:

Horizontal Deflection Amplifier - Beam Power Pentode

Max DC Pate supply voltage - 990 volts Plate dissipation (max) - 33 watts
Average Cathode current (max) - 400 ma

The typical class "B" rf linear amplifier has a typical efficency of 60 to 70 percent. Going with the higher figure the max input power per tube would be 110 watts. The max output power would be 77 watts per tube. Thus for 4 tubes all you get is 308 watts total output or 440 watts input. Either way you slice it the numbers don't add up to 950 watts.

Scott,

That is why I got out of this thread. After all, you can load up a resistor; it won't get out, but the radio would load.

I won't do a trace, because that is irrelevent to his residence, and I am not a stalker. I only know he is from Allentown, because someone apparantly searched his call sign and that is where he lives. And no, I don't buy into the fact that

My apologies to one individual; I hit the wrong button and responded to one person, not the group.

For what it is worth, the 6DK6 is rated an amazing 33 watts plate dissipation. Even immersed in olive oil and loaded to your favorite cherry red, 950 watts is stretching the imagination quite a bit. I'm sure the 950 watts you refer to does not lie on the real number line; rather the line at 90 degrees to the real number line - the imaginary numbers :)

Actually, yes. It is illegal just to advertise an amp that can operate between 24 and 35 MHz. That's why those amps keep getting kicked off of ebay. By posting your amp for sale you committed a federal offense. Aren't you proud?

You are correct Vinnie, Whether or not George

I guess if that is the case it would be illegal to sell a heathkit SB-220 then it can operate between that frequency range. from what you are saying I guess it would be illegal to sell any HF amplifier. So I guess there are alot of amateur sites and store front stores that are selling illegal equipment also. Oh and you might want to e-mail the webmaster at the ARRL website and let them know that they are selling illegal equipment in there classified section.

You might want to try a Motorola AMPLIFIED speaker. I bought a used one on eBay for $20. It came out of a police car and you know how loud they can crank them up!

Well, I liked it so much decided to buy another. Now there's one in the truck and one in the house. I bought the Motorola model
#NSN6048A. It's about 5" x 5" x 2-1/2". Uses 12v and it can get L-O-U-D!

Ask youself who would be causing so much trouble all this time and then go back and look at who the trouble makers are in the group. N8 and Voobner/dwight started it all and they probably made up wa3moj to keep jerking people around with. Go ahead lie and tell me you are wa3moj.

Thanks land, I did ! Hope you did as well. I guess you are right. I dont know why I bother but he just seems so lonely sometimes and his post beg for a response. I will just leave it alone. I haven't seen ice or any of the old timers on this board for quite some time, but they are on the yahoo board at times.

you are indeed a sick man with far too much time on his/her hands.
I get the connection we all see now. Who knows what you cut and pasted but, it appears that ice and me post to the knicks news groups so that makes us the same person. Eventhough the date appears to be 2 years ago for ice and I am still posting to that group. Oh by the way georgie I post on many other groups why dont you take your time and find all of them. You may find out I am so many different people. You are indeed a very sad man.

I do not think you are accurate.....

Posting through Google groups to a newsgroup should not show the actual posters IP address...

So now I am pleco as well?
That group is about tropical fish dummy.
What does my love of tropical fish have to do with ice?
brian vanderpool???
You are losing me here.

No, but I do happen to have an old 6 meter boat anchor up in the attic; I just don't have the guts to go for the glory (crystal controlled and hasn't been fired up in 30 years). :)
BTW, on the batteries - the NiCad batteries lasted maybe two years; the NiMH batteries in my camera only lasted one year. Seems almost cheaper to go with the alkaline - if you don't run 'em all the time. Hopefully, the NiMH batteries will have been improved since I bought the digital camera about 4 years ago.

Oh oh Scott, not true. The chats with Australia and England were not with IRLP. RF all the way, courtesy of a 10 meter port on the local repeater. Only 100 watts ERP FM, but solid signals both ways. :)

Typical jump at the gun keyclown, read this :

(d) The proscription in paragraph (b) of this section shall not apply to the marketing, as defined in paragraph (b) of this section, by a licensed amateur radio operator to another licensed amateur radio operator of an external radio frequency power amplifier fabricated in not more than one unit of the same model in a calendar year by that operator provided the amplifier is for the amateur operator's personal use at his licensed amateur radio station and the requirements of Sec. Sec. 97.315 and 97.317 of this chapter are met.
(e) The proscription in paragraph (c) of this section shall not apply in the marketing, as defined in paragraph (c) of this section, by a licensed amateur radio operator to another licensed amateur radio operator of an external radio frequency power amplifier if the amplifier is for the amateur operator's personal use at his licensed amateur radio station and the requirements of Sec. Sec. 97.315 and 97.317 of this

Well you might want to e-mail the ARRL and tell them they are selling illegal item on there classified web page. Shouldn't hams police other hams and inform them of this. This was found on there classified page you might want to e-mail this guy and let him know what he is selling is illegal. it runs on 10 meters which is illegal because it is in the 28Mhz range.

[30-May-2003] Alpha 76A runs a pair of 8874s and I'll include a spare. Will run 1300 watts out (so-called brick-on-key that Alphas are famous for.)160-10 1.5 kW out pushes tube specs. Good cosmetic condition except for a 1 inch scratch on the lower left side near the back. Will ship power transformer and tubes separately. Check out: http://www.alpha-amps.com/html/76a_pix.htm for more info in this model alpha. $850 contact: k0io@arrl.net or bigjohn@netins.net

3740. Jeep TJ Antenna Mounting.

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb
Date: 2003-06-01 07:12:01 UTC
From: BA <baut83@comcast.net>
Message-ID: <BAFF1F81.8563%baut83@comcast.net>

I have a serious question about mounting an antenna on a 2003
Jeep Wrangler Sahara (TJ).

It seems as though there are quite a few ï¿½center high mountï¿½ (spare tire rack) on the market for TJ from ï¿½97 to 2002.
However, due to redesigns in the 2003 model many parts are not interchangeable. Finding a high quality mount has basically been a huge struggle.

Iï¿½ve been considering an antenna from Premier
(A Predator 10K 27ï¿½)

Please advise if anyone has or knows of a good source for me. Iï¿½d very much appreciate it.

Thank you in advance.

Regards,

BA

Hey Steve:
I know it is a lot of power.....But make no mistake, Some people feel that they have a need for all of that power. Of course they must be making some real big dollar green to afford it though.

If you can think of it.....Dave will design it for you.

Boy I am happy we had the problems last year with the spammer and made me lock this group down.

That Aaron H. Voobner is trashing the amp group. He has tried to subscribe here. I hope whoever runs that group dumps him.

This guy is something he needs to get a life.

Of course it will probably never see dirt...

Remove the endcaps from the rear bumper. Drill the rearmost left hole large enough to put a 3/8 x 24 mount in it. Attach decent coax to it.
Ground well. Adjust antenna for maximum field strength, not lowest SWR.

Any length of coax will work. I have seven feet of RG-8X with soldered fittings. The coax comes in the tub through an existing grommet. I sealed the antenna connections with Coax-Seal.

Most Jeep clubs want a short antenna so it won't whip back and hit someone.
You will also need tow hooks, front and rear, tow straps and a fire extinguisher.

I put a Firestik KW-7 on it. About $20 dollars. I didn't tune it. Talks everywhere.

Email for pictures. (Change bomb to com)

Yeah but Sideband, when he's using AOL's web proxy, it will give you a trace back to the proxy center, not an individual addy. They don't assigns individual addy. It still doesn't preclude the fact that George is doing it and has been for years now.

Thats because Davemade.com is not Dave's site. He is not even afilliated with it. Just someone trying to make some money of his name and reputation. Always remember one thing.

Dave lives, works, and produces his equipment in New Jersey. Always has always will. Dave has forgotton more technology that some of thes fake ass phonies will ever know.

External ones will when using AM or SSB, but should be steady with FM.
Internal ones usually take their input from the PLL or VCO, so should be stable on AM, FM and SSB.

Not quite a thing of the past, it is still used in most of the Internet.
Flash and Active-X are nearly always limited to non-essential content. The main content and menu is usually HTML.
There are also DHTML and "gif" animations that are more commonly supported and less of a security risk than allowing Active-X (which is what I have switched off).

With the present options, I very rarely get a page which does not display properly, and some of those which do not display also get the same results from many other surfers - no content displayed. One example was my ISPs home page... there were plenty of complaints from people who just got a blank page. And that is progress... a blank page?

I do believe that things should move forwards (I also use SMD components) but designers should accept that people should be allowed to decide if and when to accept new software. The end user does not care if an electronic product uses SMD or old component as it makes no difference to them, but, with Web pages, it does matter as they may not be able to view it.
Even MS must accept that much of the Internet technology is a security risk, as they give the option to disable these in the "security" section of the controls.

Designers who test their page on one browser, with just one resolution setting, then declare it working are rather short sighted as there are so many different systems.

Regards,

Peter.

If you are not careful, a site can easily install such software behind your back.
I have had a site install software behind my back, just using my browser and without me even requesting anything from their site - it was done on a pop-up window from an unrelated site. I have also had my system block a site from changing my dial-up settings... just using my browser.
Many browsers have all kinds of functions built in, it's up to you how many of these things you will allow it to do at the request of any Web site that tries to. Many browsers are capable of returning quite a bit of information to a site, just using scripting.

There are limits to what can be done with just scripting, but Active-X allows even more tricks.

Regards,

Peter.

Listen dopey. I can give you a list of all the newsgroups I post to.
All I have to do is go into my agent newsreader. But I have never been ice nor will I ever be him no matter what you spew. As I said earlier plecostomus is a catfish for tropical tanks. I am not ice I am not pleco. So are you saying that just because I am in the above mentioned groups and ice is as well (at least that is what you say) that means we are the same person??? They are right you never like to admit when you are wrong. Man are you ever wrong on this one. I guess you could never admit to that possibility, but guess what? It happens. For the record I participate in many groups and I meet many people on these groups that are from other groups I visit. Some of us (guess what???) like the same kinds of things. Does that mean that they are all the same person? I mean really now george... I kind of understood your cb tirades in the beginning, thinking you were trying to release some steam but, this has gone to the limit. I mean do you even have a purpose here? Is it just to alienate everyone who disagrees with you and then stating that if they do they must be gay or black or at the very least the same people that have been arguing with you for years under a different name? Read this SLOWLY... Not everyone decides to wear many masks like you do george or whatever your name is. Some have emailed and said that you were concrete man. If so I find this sad.
Since you are an amp seller. Some have said you are prozac, if so I also find this sad since you have purchased amplifiers. Either way it makes you a hypocrite. What is the point? Like I have said in the past, what you do on here really doesn't affect the airwaves. Perhaps if you used your amp sometimes, instead of spending all this time infront of a keyboard and a search engine.
Best wishes!

Your so-called keydowners who dont keydown. What do you have to say about them? I mean there are alot of cbers that have equipment and talk skip but dont go to keydowns or at the very least don't per se

I am not so sure it is a cut and paste job. George is good at research. I think chim that the jury is still out on whether or not you are Ice or not. But George's proof is very convincing.

Actually George I did kill file you, but again you so want attention, like a 1 year old, you changed screen nics. Another for the bin, but as I say, you want attention so much, you'll change it again.

Don't know about an on-line one, but I should have a copy somewhere.
Cannot do PDF, but could do images in most formats and text in RTF (possibly the most compatible format as so many word processors seem to accept it).
I could even do it as HTML pages or a compiled Windows help file.

I just have to find it... it's not in the folder where it should be.
To e-mail me, either remove the spam trap or use the mail form on my site.

Yeah, that should be funny to watch. Just because he has it listed doesn't mean he has EVER built one, or got it to work if he did. It won't be the first time, or the last, that somebody has advertised a product for sale they haven't built and can deliver. Nothing like getting the dumb customer pay the R & D costs while having the pleasure of being a paying guinea pig too.

Hello my friend:

Just writing to you so you can understand.....Earplugger used to key on me at times.....or so some people would tell it.....But the watergates always proved different.

But that doesn't happen now.....I key on anything that I want to. Listen to your radio just so you can understand what time it really is.

There is no war.....We in NJ enjoy the competition. The only competition we get from the Northeast corner is when we in NJ key on each other. Because no one else is capable of doing it.

Missed the first part of the thread, but this has me curious. Of course, my anti-virus is on when the computer is on. My firewall is always on and always runs in stealth mode. Ever since I used to drive a Rover TC-2000, my eyes tend to watch the instruments. Twice now Zone Alarm has lit up like it was transferring a large file. The first time, I pulled the USB cable out which went to the DSL modem. Whilst that certainly stopped any transfer, it did have an unfortunate effect. First, Internet Explorer locked up. Task manager fixed that, but then one program after another locked up until I had to reboot. All was well afterwards. It happened one other time, but this time I simply hit the internet lock on Zone Alarm. Much more stable. What I never understood was what the heck was happening. One thing for sure, this computer is not connected to the internet when I am not at the console. For short breaks, the internet lock goes on. For long breaks or gaming, the lock goes on and the modem power is turned off (or the cable is unplugged). My neighbor is on Road Runner and leaves her machine on for days on end - even playing it as a radio - and she has no firewall! All security updates are in place (no, not the viruses I've been sent in e-mails - 100% intercepted, by the way). Any suggestions you guys have?

Thanks & 73 from Rochester, NY
Jim

That's nothing. All I have to do is post anything and Georgie-girl

Unfortunately, this is probably Georgie-girl posting and replying to Check out the following URL:

http://bama.sbc.edu/index.html
They have the manual for the Heathkit signal generator. I downloaded the gif files. They do have a link for a viewer that will allow more compressed files to be downloaded and viewed, but darned if I'm going to add a plug in for my browser. You can if you want to. If you opt for the gif files, it will help if you have some kind of photo software. Currently, I am running 1152 X 864 in full color - and the quick time viewer is way off the screen (meaning I have to grab and pull it across the screen to view different parts of the schematic). Opening the gif file with Photoshop or Photodeluxe allows me to set the magnification and use convenient scroll bars. Your choice; the gif files are very viewable - just more manageable in some software than others. There are 14 gif files totaling around 2.3 megabytes. Read the front page as to using Internet Explorer for FTP. Not recommended; I used Opera and had no problem whatever. If you do use Netscape or Internet Explorer, read that front page about possible problems with FTP in the browser. It isn't rocket science, but you could stumble around a bit if you don't read it. In any case, the files are free :)

Brian's amp don't compete with Dave's amp. I'm sure if people are looking for a well designed and manufactured amp, they will give Brian a call. If they are looking for a competition amp at twice the price, they'll give Dave a call.

Morph, you are not an idiot so its frustrating that you want to stir the pot like you do.

How about putting up some cash and check out Brain's amp for yourself! I'm sure you would be impressed!

Different people will always want different things from a service.
Some UK shops have it sorted, they have several stores in each town. Each store has it's own name, image and target customer... one for the young, one for older women, one for the "larger woman", one for men, etc. You only know that they are all part of the same company if you take the time to find out.
They have realised that, no matter how much you try to make everyone the same... it will never happen.

Radio is not any different. You get CBers who would not pay the high prices charged by Amateur shops, and some Amateurs who would not be seen dead in a CB shop.
Some CBers may use it just to keep in contact, so would just get whatever their local shop sells. Others treat it as a hobby, and may shop around to get all the gimmics such as a Wally light. Then there are those who like to DX, and will get the biggest, meanest motherfking system they can get - even if they have to get it from half way around the world.

Regards,

Peter.

An attempt at brevity at anothers expense.....it's exactly what lids do and just what we have come to expect from lids like KC8LDO.
Lelnad's lost ISPs for conduct unbecoming and numerous tos violations?....hmmm... I said he was "suspended" for a short.....work on that deficit in communication that is such a heavy monkey on your back.....as all are aware, most services terminate after a warning....sometimes several. Talk about exhausting multiple chances,,,,,..take your pick in no particular order......bigpond, supernews, bignet, giganews, cotse..and a few others....he had them all pulled for his REPEAT and continual incompetence, maliciousness, and inability to conform to rules he feels do not apply to him.

Since acts such as KC8LDO repeatedly getting ISPs pulled for violations of terms of services actually interest you, feel free to email me and I will share some of the emails I received from his ISP informing me of his terminations,,,the same that were shared with you and posted here in the past.
Acts such as this illuminate his blatant hypocrisy ultimately responsible for his entertaining slide to the bottom rung on the ladder of human evolution and status of bottom feeding lid. Thanks for bringing such to the groups attention...although Lelnad may take issue with what you are approaching. In fact, he is probably seething and reeling right about now, cursing you under his breath, praying that you don't focus too heavily on he or his actions.

Ahh,,nothing like the sweet affirmation from where we literally expect the least. Kc8ldo and Geogre really unleashed on y'all this weekend, eh? Hahahah!
My refusal to give in to wanna-be cyber nazis like yourself that attempt to tell others how to post has you in dire straits. The lack of self-esteem you suffer from manifests as attacks against those who stand up for freedom of speech. That you wish to censor and take away my American birthright merely because you lack self-control to pass on posts you can not handle is contradictory to the first amendment and the principles upon which usenet and the internet was intended...the free and unfettered exchange of ideas and information among the public. You wish to take away that right for no other reason than your own hateful agenda and lack of tolerance for opposing voices.

A subtle but effective formula for ascertaining your agenda is now available for your education and my entertaining pleasure. The folks you can't comprehend (due the deficit in communication that ails you) and wish to ban, we will refer to as the "bad" (Twistedhed). The folks you refer to with the non-term "akcs" (making up terms and "new" words is what one does when at a loss for words, IE: communication deficit) and anyone who bashes cbers, we will refer to as the "good" (akcs). For those that you feel are on the "bad" side of things (Twistedhed), exercise some deductive reasoning......attempt to remove my delivery and intimate personality traits that you focus on like a school marm in love. I understand that my responsibility for the relegation of you to lid-status for illustrating your blatant hypocrisy may make such a task difficult and tedious, if not impossible, your disadvantaged myopia acting as the beta-blocker.

Once you have managed that part of the exercise, have an attempt at viewing the unadulterated facts, such as your new "in-drag" nic merely recently appearing , yet again, went on the attack, and for no reason other than the malice in your black heart and the vast space between your ears. Your communication deficit has relegated you to,,well,,one merely needs glance at the pathetic depths you effectively reduced yourself. Am I still Fatty Arbuckle?
Ludicrous.

It's the issues, junior, the issues..something you have never managed to comprehend. You prefer to live vicariously through internet strangers by delving failingly into our personal lives.

The issue.... is you are attempting to suppress anothers right to freely express their beliefs. Many feel such vitriol and your bouncing from ISP to ISP abuses such rights, but I feel you have the ability, and right, to share your ignorance with the world.
Eliminate the malice from the equation (your posts) and we are left with nothing, no substance, nothing but a damaged ego on your behalf, resulting from having your feelings hurt too many times from your inability to control others. Feelings of impotency have you flummoxed and causes you to react involuntarily asinine.

AGAIN....The issue.... is you are attempting to suppress anothers right to freely express their beliefs, and illustrating what a failure you have become..

It is "probably" Geogre? You mean there exist some in this forum who don't know who is who? Check it out.....theoretically, one who lives in the Philthadelphia area can stay busy.....theoretically, once can sniff for a Wi-Fi network at his home.....then one could theoretically crack his WEP. Then, one could theoretically do a reverse traceroute to whatever pc you are on while logged in and on to his Wi-Fi network. Those last hops usually reveal the true ISP.
Theorettically, a Philthadelphian or New Jersey-ite could employ the process of elimination to find the DSL or cable service providers that exist in his area. File a complaint with all of them in the area, explaining the excessive morphing and harassment or whatever your complaint may be,,,,chances are one will strike pay dirt. You should receive replies from the ISPs he is not lised with claiming such. The dial-up ISP may be the hardest to ascertain, merely because of the requirements vs others. Each packet one sends will contain his IP return addy and make certain to notice the time and date of capture of the packet.
Theoretically, one can traceroute to that IP addy and those last hops will tell the tale....I was informed that one troulemaking lid present here was tossed for violations of their TOS by this exact process of identification. Coupled with some well collected google archives, when the date and time tamp is fresh, it allows the offenders ISP to ID one as the dial-up cutomer who was logged at the time.....well presented google pieces are worth their weight in..ummm..ISP fees...(hyuk).

Hi Steve,

A generic answer to your question applied for most cases is yes. Typical in-line frequency counters will change with modulation applied to the typical am carrier. Some counters have better sampling circuits and will appear to "hold the frequency" longer.

FM should be a constant diplay in most cases.

What is a "competition" amp??

An amp you use to "compete" with your Ebonics trashtalkin skipland neighbors??

For an uneducated person like me...the www.davemade.com site comes across as more legitimate than a "free page" does. The content seems more credible too.

Heres what I heard in the 11meter amp yahoo group they were talking about one guy was dealing amps and running a pirate radio CB shop from his house in the swamp I think it was Missisipi or Florida or something. The feds set up an amp buy through an agent posing as a keyclown and nailed him on a 2182b. Then they subpoenaed his computers and found all kinds of internet postings against the government etc he bragged on public forums that he didn't have to obey laws etc. under assumed aliases etc enough to hold him for investigation. oh yeah funny how things snowball in a case like this they found a little weed too not a lot just a pipe full, but the southern states they are strict, so they seized his boat and his pickup truck and levied a big fine plus mandatory 5 year jail term. All from seling illegal CB amps and acting like an asshole, imagine that.

You completly misunderstood my post or lost your train of thought during the reply. Some one said (im not back tracking to see who) "flash is not the standard for web design" and i pretty much said "no it isn't but it should be".

This has nothing to do with shopping for fat people clothing.

Hello,
We are now inviting people to post requests for parts on the Global Parts Repository. Be sure to use a negative number for the quantity.
Soon, requests for parts will be separated from parts available.

You have so many aliases on this group. To be honest with you I for even agree with you there however, there are a good many things that men do to make them feel good in life. Some might even argue that what you do behind a keyboard is compensation for a small penis as well.

Your thoughts?

You readily admit what you posted is nothing more than hearsay......yet I was willing to give you the benefit of the doubt.,,as it may have occurred in the olden days. Making up words can not be overlooked, however. The trait is clearly indicative of those suffering from communication deficit disorder (cdd)....and those that frequent this forum that suffer from such deficits have been exposd as hypocrites and liars. The hearsay you allude to probably never took place...more cb voodoo and myths, but far be it from me to try and change what you believe...just wanted to point out,,,,,,,it more than likely did not occur, and if it did, much urban legend was ad libbed.

I understand, The stuff that keeps you awake at night,,,yet,,here you are, perfectly illustrating your inability to obey laws and terms of services, lest you wouldn't be relegated to your additional new posting home. You are no different, except some of us readily admit our infractions...you merely select which laws to obey, disregard those rules you don't like, and chastise others for breaking the laws/rules you choose to obey and feel should be respected. Are you blind to such hypocrisy? When your own house is in order, someone may respect your opinion,,,not prior.

>under assumed aliases

Yea,,,exactly like privacy advocates, including the US government, has admonished people to do,,,,,,NOT use their true identity while on the internet for such things as usenet,,because of kooks like N8 and Lelnad. Today, security experts, the media, the government, everyone warns against revealing personal information, lest it be used against you like n8wwm and kc8ldo have done.
Much to your chagrin, posting things on the internet, such as readily admitting refusal to adhere to the skip law, is not illegal, yet you want restrictions on such free speech.

Now I know what you're claiming is absolute bullshit. You also demonstrate a propensity for favoring sheople status, as you repeat what you are told as fact without bothering to ascertain whether any of it is true or not. "Acting like an asshole" should be construed as relative, and probably meaningless coming from one who feels the need to invent new words to express himself. Utilizing a conjured and non-existent term as a catch-all insult phrase for a collective group that is responsible for your endless frustration level, from yet ANOTHER posting access..,,now THAT is something to which one can sit back and say heartily "Imagine That!" LOL...now,,,,,dump the bag of lime in your own back yard,,upon compost, you may be summoned to do so again in the not-so-distant future.

That is exactly the point, Twirted. Without proof, anything could be ad libbed. Anything could be heresay. Like that story you made up about tracking someone in Philadelphia thru their WiFi net etc. Or the other story you made up about Leland getting popped from 5 ISP's. Or the story you made up about Spaky being bounced from his ISP's. Or the story you made up about Riley telling you freebanding was OK with him. Or the story you made up about....well, why go on, you get the idea, LOL. You, Twirted, are the master of ad-lib and unprovable heresay, which is why it is knee-slapping HILARIOUS to see you clucking like a chicken about someone else's tall tale. But keep on clucking because we are enjoying the show.

He posts using Comcast, in both Allentown and Trenton (NJ). And as Valco he posted as Aanal Aaron H. Voobner by way of AOL. It appears that he has to keep changing his access to keep hiding his various NICs.

Frankly, I don't care, if only he'd post something worthwhile instead of complete bovine excrement all the time. But Georgie-girl can only troll and snipe like the coward he is. Too bad he gets all his courage from a bottle.

Voobie isn't back in action. That was Georgie-girl Busch (Valco) posting by way of AOL, which he says he doesn't have. So he lies. So

A "competition amp" has the following features:
1.) No biasing that results in tremendous harmonics that cause interference to other bands.
2.) Built on a prototype grade circuit board with point-to-point wiring.
3.) Was intended to operate with no design "margin" and is inherently unreliable.
4.) Has a staggering price tag.

I change my nic , yet I have posted from the same ISP each and every post I have ever made to this group. I have never accessed this group via AOL or any other isp, here is where the hypocrites come in, they are so paranoid they have created all these fake names and anon access to this group they don't know who is who anymore they are accusing and arguing amongst themselves. it is so comical I actual hurt my sides laughing when I am accused of posting as 5 different people from all these accounts. Do you think your really worth it, I mean stop and think, ok Ill make it easy for you lets say I am a loser, I am a drunk, I am jobless, I don't have a life, do you think I could afford all the Isp's and have the time to sit and make all these posts, my enjoyment comes from all the posturing and false accusations about who did what. That for me is worth the time I take to make a few posts.

5 years... that nowt.
In the UK, a chap was stopped for driving the wrong way up a one way street and it snowballed into several cases of murder.

As you seem to be suggesting that illegal CBers are anti-government druggies, then people who break traffic laws must go around killing people, believing that God told them to do it.
Next time you are out driving, and you here voices telling you to go kill a Ho... check that you are not speeding, as that could be the cause of your urges.

If acting like an Asshole was a crime, then the "Antikeyclowns" would all get life or the chair.

Exactly right, Yuh Strokheet. Dimbulbs like richard cranium have no clue how far the vast AKC influence has spread and how they are poised to take down the entire keyclown subculture. There are people in here that no one knows about. I even heard there are some arrl executives helping us. And we here now are just the tip of the spear. Good thing that guy, what was his name, woody something, told us the scoop on craniums sordid past, he has been written off as a harmless imbecile.

No cranium. cranium is a harless imbecile. We found out because the woody guy told us about how he lost his balls in an accident with high voltage in a pirate radio station. Yes, it was a horrible accident, caused by cranium's stupidity, and it left him with just tiny raisins where his balls should be. So when ever he posts now just think of the tiny raisins and you see why we say hes harm less.

We dont know too much about the accident except that it was somewhere in the winter and it was cold and richard cranium put his balls on the pirate radio transmitting set to warm them for a minute but that was just when woody decided to turn the power up and the antenna lost its ground lead and craniums balls got flash fried like a pair of dim sum ravioli in a chinese restaurant. Ever since then he been angry and trolling newsgroups and ya can't blame the guy. I mean, how many people could go thru that and still stay with the hobby. Funny how whenever you think of richard cranium now you can't but help thinking about them two burnt up little raisins he got instead of balls. Oh well, heck, you asked.

Maybe I should have made it easier. Let's try it again:

Who am I this week, Twisty? (multiple choice)

1. Leland Scott
2. Dwight Stewart
3. Glenn Sparks
4. N7VCF
5. "George"
6. BigBen
7. All of the above

For those schooled in math this is what I have to say about the above:

Limit (Probability_of_KC8LDO_Losing_ISP_Service) = 0
Twisted's_Lying --> Infinity

And I'm still here posting whenever I please using the same old ISP
I've had for the past couple of years regardless of Twirted

Definition of the SuperBowl
If 10,000 CB'er's are on the SuperBowl
then only 1000 can be heard some of the times
& only 100 can be heard most of the times
& only 10 can be heard all the time
This is a great example why the bowl is not for the weak!

OK. Listen to what you just said. You are hoping that the people on this group that disagree with your tactics and who themselves either use a linear (damn near everyone) or go to keydowns, will..... when they get off the pc go to their cb friends on the air and say there is this guy named george and his akc club and they dont like us having linears. so we must all stop this now. Do you think that is how it will work to your favor? Why would the so-called illegals help spread the word?

All stupid comments bother me george. Can i call you george. is that your real name? I mean try to be reasonable. Negative comments sexual or racial I think is simply ignorant. Now you seem like a bright guy so why stoop so low. It messes up the message as I stated earlier.
Second why would you want to hit home with me a racial slur? Were you trying to hurt my feelings. I still maintain that I am white and would have no problem meeting you and showing you that if you were up to that. This is not a physical threat just the only way I can prove it to ya.

There are many who would disagree with this on this group as

There very well could be some truth to that however, I still maintain that if you never changed your nic and stayed consistent with whatever original nic you used. (can you even remember that original name?)
Then people would just keep the topic to you and the argument to you.
Have you considered that all the confusion over the names is simply because you have changed so many? I mean to say if you stayed with the original name (again I have no idea what that was) perhaps there wouldn't be all this confusion about who is who and maybe we wouldn't even be discussing this?

No, you just didn't understand my reply.

You cannot have Flash as a standard when it is not suitable for all systems and browsers and while some people do not want it. Rather like making clothes in just one size... great for those who are that size, but not much use to the majority of people.

If things really were that easy, there would only be one of everything in the world... including just one model CB, one type of antenna, one type of microphone... etc. How many different models of CB are there just in America?
Some like flashy, some like basic, some like easy... others just want cheap.
But, some features will be common to all systems.

Peter.

You readily admit what you posted is nothing more than hearsay......yet
I was willing to give you the benefit of the doubt.,,as it may have occurred in the olden days. Making up words can not be overlooked, however. The trait is clearly indicative of those suffering from communication deficit disorder (cdd)....and those that frequent this forum that suffer from such deficits have been exposd as hypocrites and liars. The hearsay you allude to probably never took place...more cb voodoo and myths, but far be it from me to try and change what you believe...just wanted to point out,,,,,,,it more than likely did not occur, and if it did, much urban legend was ad libbed.

>That is exactly the point, Twirted.

The point is on your head. Actually, you have never once made a point,,including this last post...you merely attack as your deficit grows stronger by the day.. How did you misconstrue your story as being the exact same point I made? You trying to say you made up a story only to have someone question it so you can say "yea,,,,,that was what I meant?"..lol
You apparently believethe story true without fact,,I made the point and illustrated it was more than likely bullshit,,and you agree with me. My point was so far removed from your nonpoint that you are already beside yourself with excitement and body fluids.

>proof, anything could be ad libbed. Anything >could be heresay. Like that story you made up >about tracking someone in Philadelphia thru >their WiFi net etc.

(sigh) I guess I will have to dissect your incorrect fallacies stemming from your communication deficit. I claimed no story about tracking anyone...read it again,,it said "hypothetically". Your deficits are making you angrier by the day,,,how drool, yet amazingly juvenile and illustrative of all I maintain of you.
Predictable.

>Or the other story you made up about Leland >getting popped from 5 ISP's.

LOL.... KC8LDO did indeed lose several ISPs,,,,for making stupid mistakes like you just did.....hahhhahaand. Now try to remain on topic and not make me the focal point of your affection, lest you wish to profess your incompetence and ignorance once again.

>Or the story you made up about Spaky being >bounced from his ISP's.

He's gone, and nothings gonna bring him back,,,he's gone!

>Or the story you made up about Riley telling >you freebanding was OK with him.

No such thing ever occurred.
But an author search of your 64.12 addy has been done, and a collection of your antics, including your forges and crossposts is being forwarded to where it will do the most good.

>Or the story you made up about....well, why go >on,

Why? Because it illustrates magnificently your impotence and why you find yourself in the lowly position you do,,,lol.

>you get the idea, LOL.

I MAKE the ideas,,you copy them, implement them, imitate them, forge them, and love them. In other words,,you are nothing without validity from me,,,need proof? Sit tight...:)

Oh boy,,come insult me, lid....lol,,, >master of ad-lib and unprovable heresay,

Such an incident certainly may have been funny, but you are not "someone else"..you are none but a three time loser, in life, love, and amateur radio. You're nobody, lest "someone else" , but you continue to talk to yourself and recognize yourself as "someone else".....hhahahhahhah!

> But keep on clucking

>because we are enjoying the show.

Great...acceptance and recognizing your disease is the first step toward recovery., but not one person has ever considered you part of "we" except for poor N8wwm, KC8LDO, Geogre, and N3CVJ,,that's it...the lids of the group....at least you recognize it's MY show you dance to,,my choice of music, MY dance moves....lol...At least you have overcome your impotence and accepted it as an innate part of you, along with your failures, Such a novel way and approach of admitting you "failed" in your effforts and finally realizing,,,.....I ain;t going anywhere......LOL!

Nope, just troll comments made by George through comcast & aol web accsess.

Landshark

Now as forecast, watch at least four to six comments made through Comcast & Aol in some form of sexual, foul language, harassing overtones.

How does me telling you it is not me prove or disapprove anything? You really are reaching on a string, I am defending myself from false accusations by you.

Remeber when you whined that it wasn't you made up all sorts of excuses about how it was a co worker etc, LOL who whined, he made up stories. You did FREAKSHARK

A poor tradeoff to be made when dealing with a simple low pass filter omission. I would not consider this type of solid state amplifier clean enough to be placed on the air without some measure of output filtering.

Regardless of the class of service...

Figure two or three simple coils and some adjacent caps would do the job just right.

The difference is...

Without any low pass filtering, the amplifier is dirty and many good receivers (and other electronic devices) will probably hear the dirt.

With proper bias and a simple low pass filter, no one should be able to tell you have the amplifier on, other than the increased signal strength. Better to be clean and loud...

The guy at www.davemade.com is not the owner of the line, he's a builder out of NC. dave made amps are kits sent to builders around the country. there are lots of them. The man who is "Dave" is a very well "hidden" person, whom only a select few really know who he is, due to the fact he doesn't want to attack the wrong kind of attention, if you know what i mean. kind of like the guy with pirate, the guy who builds the blue faced palomar's (gary), and the rest of those guys...

3940. Remaking a BP-180

Sorry about the crosspost. If you respond, please leave rec.radio.cb in it so I don't have to subscribe to all the groups. <;

You may also email me, change bomb to com.

My BP-180 battery pack has bit the dust. This fits the Pro-90, Uniden 235 and 245. I want to rebuild the pack with Energizer NiMH 1850 mAh batteries. Has anyone done this? Are these batteries too big to charge in the radio? Can this brand accept solder?
I've had Nicads that can't be soldered to before. Thanks.

Scott, somewhere around Baltimore, MD.

Forget it Twirted, no thanks. You can show your "control" to some of your like minded ward buddies, that is if you can manage to quit squeezing your "control" in your hands long enough. The medical personnel says it cuts off the circulation when you do it too long. The doctors also keep telling you to quit and wear your "jock strap". Going around and showing off your "control" really grosses out the staff at the sanitarium.

>Lelnad hates the truth,,

No. However you wouldn't recognize it if it slammed you in the behind.

>all this over naming the ISP's he lost

ISP's - a.k.a. Imaginary Service Providers. Tell it to your therapist.

>....LOL.....

Yeah, no kidding, you're going to need all you can get if you ever expect to get out of there before you die of old age.

>Lelnad is on the warpath again,,,

You must have been watching a cheap John Wayne movie when you were writing this part.

>wanna see a magic trick?

No. I've heard all about your squirt trick, from the doctors, that you do using your "control".
They say its really disgusting when you get it all over yourself. The orderlies have to draw lots to see who gets stuck with the job of cleaning you up afterwards.

>Nice sig, Lelnad,,,,,,,,,,

Thanks. You keep that up and people will have heart failure seeing you pay somebody a compliment.

>now muster some courage and self-control if you ever learned any,

Speak for yourself Twirted. You go around and show your "jock strap" to everybody in sight claiming its some kind of trophy so often that the staff has to pin a diaper on you in its place. If they didn't the ward would be a stinking mess. The whole staff is getting sick of your crap Twirted.

>and focus on something such as a > related issue and not your lidness and love for me.

I'll bet your favorite movie was "The Crying Game". Don't mistake my attention, it's purely clinical, for anything that would satisfy your Homo tendencies. Your desire for some tender bun loving would be better served by taking the subject up with one of the staff Psychiatrists. They will help you in your transition from out of the closet.

>You most certainly do not post through any of your past ISP;s

Yeah, that's true when you consider that the cable modem service I have now runs at 1500 mbps compared to the old dial up line at 28.8 kbps. Of course you wouldn't understand that since your stuck using the cheap WebTV service available in the common room. States run institutions don't get much money to operate.

>..one merely needs email me,

That's the best you can hope for, you're too disgusting to meet in person.

>or if you wish, I can post your termination for threatening me

Besides having Homo tendencies you have delusions of persecutions too. That's a bad mix.

>like the coward you are...Lelnad,,lid, liar...

.pants on fire.yada..yada. I've heard that childish rhyme before. You want to be treated like adults then learn to act like one and grow up.

>lol.

You desperately need it more than I do Twirted.

discuss the issues with me. I hope he does instead of attack you. I asked some questions I think he might want to answer. Anyway I hope so. otherwise I will just leave it alone.

I think its a typo dino.

Channels
There are 40 shared CB channels used on a "take-turns" basis. There are no channels authorized in the CB Radio Service above 27.405 MHz or below 26.965 MHz.

Linear Amplifier Ban
Users many not raise the power output of their CB units. That would be unfair to the other users sharing the channel by raising the level of radio noise. You must not attach a "linear," "linear amplifier" or any other type of power amplifier to your CB unit, Moreover, you must not modify your CB unit internally. Doing so cancels its certification and you forfeit your authorization to use it.

Well now, that's the same prose you use when whining to Leland. Why the song and and simply that you think I'm Leland Scott? This ain't like you, Twist. You name, of course. That's probably why you have assigned me several. And that's why you will never win a face-to-face confrontation with honesty: you are too

Well Mr Pharteen I think you are barking up one of the trees, but consider this. Think how the internet has turned a bunch of rag tag amp copiers and assemblers into amp salesman par excellance, with their own traditions and false legends being engendered by these individuals of course, them and their willing accomplices and all of this for one reason, so they don't have to go out and get a real job. Take these outlandishly rediculous prices for these davemade amps. Now this 187 character, says they are the real davemade amps, like that means anything. You can hear that guy out there all of the time on cb channel 6, if you wish, and it makes you wonder what he does for a living. And Mr Pharteen, if you will remember, he at one time had a picture of his home twenty on his website. That in mind , this consciencious operator would have to ask the million dollar question and that is: how does he continue to operate with impunity? Where is the nearest FCC enforcement station in the Jersey area?

The joke's on you, Twist. As I explained the last time your destructive reasoning led you believe that I'm somebody else because of a few spelling errors -- I have always made a few errors here and there. In fact, you could probably tell that I'm the same Frank because I keep misspelling the same words.
Nobody's perfect. But at least I don't claim to be a professional journalist

Hey, curious Dan.....doooooooood! Why not sentences strung between lots of periods....like this...good buddy....? But heck were just glad youre back. To answer your question about Dave and that gang operating with impunity, well think about it old buddy. It's not really impunity when you cant put your real name on your business and you cant let too many people know who you really are and you cannot advertise in aboveground venues like radio hobby magazines but must stick to the web like porn sites do, and you cannot trust too many people to know what it is you manufacture. You call that 'impunity'? I call it hiding and afraid. Word is that voobie boy is on the rampage and starting up a new round of complaints, this guy is really perisistent and after a dozen or so letters and phone calls somebody in a government suit is going to push some paper around just to get the guy off his back and then dave and his boys are going to be up the creek. You know the creek, right? Been swimming in it before have you?

Can't disagree with you there.

Even a simple L-pad would be a significant improvement, but a 3-pole Butterworth would be much better.

Here's a simple experiment for anyone that wants to know just how significant harmonics can be. Download Argo, Spectran, or some other FFT waterfall program, plug in any big coil into the mic jack of your sound card, and take a good look:

http://www.aimcomm.net/sparky/capt0000.jpg

You will see lots of evenly-spaced lines, which consist of your 60 Hz house current and all it's harmonics (120, 180, 240 Hz, etc). These lines (hundreds of them) extend up well beyond the frequency limits of your sound card. Why?
Because light dimmers and motor speed controls don't have filters.

After seeing that, you should be able to imagine what an unfiltered RF amplifier looks like in the spectrum analyzer; the difference being that the 'lines' are the fundamental RF freq (e.g, 26.965 MHz) and it's harmonics (e.g, 53.930 MHz [amateur], 80.895 [TV ch.5], 107.860 [FM BC ch. 300], etc).

>With proper bias and a simple low pass filter, no one should be able to >tell you have the amplifier on, other than the increased signal strength.

Better to be legal and responsible.

Because Randy this is the most talked about thing in the history of illegal CB and you are for some reason out of touch with whats happening. Maybe there is a reason why you are being kept in the dark?

Randy, what are the facts? I see you posted with the name wa3moj@aol.com and I am accused of having that account. Which I don't, It leads me to believe foul play is involved.

Foul play is definitely involved. I think Randy just got caught up with the wrong crowd. Being easily influenced, he tried to fit in. That is the cause of his one wa3moj post. Twisty and Nebo were posting wa3moj forges in the ham groups for a while. That was after Twisty posted as 1mangang. And did forges of leland Scott all over the web. After Doug sent him the jock strap in the mail you might say he went ballistic. Twisty should leave the news group, he about done here.

I thought someone was selling NiMH battery packs for replacing the BP-180 and that they were sold on EBay. Not sure.
[later]
Try this. I searched for "bp-180" in "titles and descriptions" in the category:

Home > All Categories > Electronics & Computers > Gadgets & Other Electronics > Police Scanners

http://search-desc.ebay.com/search/search.dll?MfcISAPICommand=GetResult&query=bp-180&cgiurl=http%3A%2F%2Fcgi.ebay.com%2Fws%2F&ht=1&from=R10&catref=C3&currdisp=2&itemtimedisp=1&st=2&SortProperty=MetaEndSort&category2=40978&srchdesc=y&BasicSearch=

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=3028479593&category=40980

I thought they were $20, but they are two for $25. You can buy them ready-made, or you can make them, knowing that it is possible.

I have two SC-180B scanners. I'd build my own.

Best wishes.

Because to some people, rec.radio.cb is the world. To those people, life cannot exist without rrcb. These people cannot resist the urge to reply to any post which contradicts their rudimentary understanding of reality, regardless of whether it's relavent to the newsgroup or not. Twistedhed is a perfect example: When was the last time you saw a post by him that is even remotely related to CB radio? A long time ago, I'm sure. But he keeps on posting. Why? Because he lives for the attention he receives in this newsgroup -- attention he can't receive from normal venues -- forums consisting of people that are emotionally secure, morally mainstream, and predominatly legal. It pains him to see people stray so far from his warped interpretation of morality that he must seek validation in a newsgroup where he thinks he is intellectually dominant. He, like so many others, are wrong. And that is why it's so hard for him, like so many others, to understand simple concepts such as you describe.

Again I pose you the question, was that prior to Frank Gillinad's "destructive reasoning" professing to the world the accusation my name was a "Roger Wiseman", I am a hammie, and live in WV? It's a simple question,,,why the song and dance? (chuckle chuckle giggle giggle)

>because of a few spelling errors --

Because of many, not a few. Gillinad never made such errors,,he was too anal. Then again, an email told me to take delight in the possibility that I actually drove you to drink,,,hence the recent and numerous spelling errors. Now, I would certainly take no delight in such actions by anyone, but one must admit, it is an excellent theory, and these fellas here seem to be familiar with your particluar stripe.....

>I have always made a few errors here and

Not true, Gillinad used to make MANY errors, in fact, most of what Frank Gillinad writes is erroneous...but none of his errors were ever in spelling.

If you managed to get the other side of the grey matterworking, you would have no problem in comprehending that many of my posts aren't sentences at all,,,,

>-- now THAT'S just plain lazy

That is what one does in their down time,,,,lazes...you may wish to try it some time instead of paying homage to me and having a lowly cber such as myself clean your clock with your own self-professed ignorance, such as below....

>and very unprofessional!

And you are aware my level of concern, concerning a non-opinion such as yours..
Despite yourdrinking that has you believing otherwise, this cb forum does not require your approval of what consitutes professionalism..it's that lack of control that makkes you an ignorant lid......Unlike those with serious deficits, I need not utilize my hobby, nor this group, as a means of pathetic and shameless self-promotion.
I educated Gillinad once before on his ignorance concerning acceptable journalism, but if you wish to insist you are indeed an alcoholic Frank Gillinad, it is folly why you would continue to insist on conveying your ignorance as far as you can take it.....and since your comprehension deficit is responsible for your ignorance and poor memory, I'll indulge your need for another education concerning that of which you absolutely nothing of.....

The often heard but misleading "rule" that a sentence should not end with a preposition is transerred from Latin. In Latin, it as an accurate description of practice. English grammar is different from Latin grammar, and the rule does not fit English. In speech, the final preposition is normal and idiomatic, especially in questions: IE: "Who are you waiting for? Where did that neat radio come from? You didn't say which problem you worked on".....and on it goes.
  In writing, the problem of placement concerning the preposition arises most when a sentence ends with a relative clause in which the relative pronoun (IE: that, which, whichever, whom, whomever, whomsoever) is the OBJECT of a preposition. In edited writing, such as formal writing, when a pronoun other than "THAT" introduces a final relative clause, the preposition usually, but not always, precedes its object: IE: "Sparky abandoned the newsgroup to which he had devoted his whole life", ... "I called Gillinad a lid, with whom I had been corresponding." Follow so far?

If the pronoun is "THAT", which cannot should never be preceded by a preposition, or if the pronoun is omitted, then the preposition must occur at the end: "The real radio technician corrected the mistakes in the books that Sparky scribbled in", or "YOU are the troll we spoke of." English lesson over. If you wish tutored (you need it, based on your lack of English knowledge), take it to email. Your arrogance is bested only by your ignorance. Now try and stay relevant and not worry about trying to teach another something you know nothing of.

Lelnad is a lid, a coward. Only cowards forge folks.....he has no communication skill and fights like a fairy....the perfect example was turning his yellow tail and running when defeated in debate and forging me, Train, and Nebo in the hammie forums. Say what you want, the late McCollum proved it and nothing you can ever whine about will ever place your word above Dick's in this forum or in any hammie forum.....you know it and so does the rest of the group.....period.

Some unadulterated truth: If one would follow threads you refer with Lelnad involved, one would see Lelnad initiating strife,,much like yourself. Geogre referring to Lelnad, you referring too Lelnad,,,,,are you guys mad at Lelnad? C'mon,,,what'd he do <g>?

>are too afraid to show your face!

Haha..honesty needs to "win" nothing,,someday, you may be taught such. Concerning "face-to-face",,your anger is gettting the best of you,,,BUT.....I already have met folks on this group,,,have you? I guess you would call them "keyclowns"...(funny how those deficits render y'all to making up words).but they are good folk...I have met some really cool folks here,,have plenty in common with a select few totally independent of radio, and plenty in common with the large majority that can handle an adult conversation without allowing ones post to be invalidated by insults and personal feelings.,,like yourself. Managed to obtain several personal phone numbers from this group,,even some "anti-illegal cb" hammies......not all share your myopia, malice, misconduct, and penchant for miscreant status. Chew on that for awhile.

C'mon down. I'll take ya' fishing and you can bring any one person you want.....I'll even bring my little brother's best friend Archie (a Pinellas County Sheriff's Deputy) who loves Grouper fishing, just so you two don't feel outnumbered and threatened by little old me out on the high seas and have no excuse for accepting my southern hospitality. Airline tickets roundtrip from here to your area are going for no more that 279 RT via LAX,,at least on this end. You pay for your own videotape. Greyhound buses run much cheaper, but judging by the amount of time you have spent here lately and your irrational anger-filled posts, things aren't going too well for you,,I would expect nothing less from you than what you have always done,,cower in the ng and snivel about your impotency and reigning ignorance.

NiMh batteries draw more power from their chargers as they
"refill" then NiCad batteries. It's possible your radio's chargingcircuits burn out when charging NiMh batteries. Rebuilding a pack with NiCads with solderlips should not be a problem.

Hope your problem is solved sone.

None of the stores have nicads anymore, only NiMh.

Thanks. I'm going to cycle the new batteries a few times before I make the pack, so the batteries can reach their full potential.

It sure would be nice if someone would design an alkaline holder for that radio. They could just put a series diode or two to drop the voltage and keep them from charging. Of course, the diode(s) would go, and NiMh's put in their place. <;

If only I had some really large shrink wrap...

Frankie has a lot of nerve to put down someone for being something based only on his assumptions. He claims to be a broadcast engineer. How unprofessional of him to troll in a lowly CB newsgroup!

He's also, like Georgie-girl, a liar; he said he was "leaving the newsgroup". He didn't. Don't waste any more breath (or fingernails) on him, Twist.

You mean someone is still faking as Voobner. He doesn't exist; there is nobody named Voobner in the USA, and probably Canada. And the latest "sighting" wasn't as clever as the original, either; his DNS was traced as AOL (that was Georgie-girl Busch), while the original managed to cover his DNS tracks.

So Voob isn't still about; some wannabe Voob is.

It's not really that bad, but there seem to be a few lame hambos who think they are making a difference by trolling here. They make dumb comments and stifle any real conversation. And we all know who they are: Georgie-girl Busch WA3MOJ, Doggie-style Adairierre N8WWM, and their sychophant friends like JJ and Frankie.

NiCd chargers charge until the voltage stops rising and then falls a small amount. NiMH batteries don't exhibit that final dip in voltage; their voltage plateaus. So the average NiCd charger can be expected to grossly overcharge NiMH batteries.

Of the ones you mentioned, Doug at least USES a radio. <;
I wonder if he can be heard over the mountains to here...

From last week's ARnewsline report #1346:
http://www.arnewsline.org/

ON THE AIR: NEW NET ON THE MAGIC BAND

Interested in the "Magic Band?" Of course we are talking about 6 meters and if your answer is yes then this one is for you.

Doug Adair, N8WWM, reports the creation of a SSB net on 50.260 based in Toledo Ohio, Toledo is grid square EN81 and the net mets every Thursday at 9 p.m. Eastern time. (VHF Reflector)

To Whom It May Concern:

I knew the group would ban me. That's why I have 2 more "undercover" email addresses that are still active within the group. I will use those memberships to gather information on who is selling amps in violation of FCC rules and I will file complaints with the district FCC office in their state. Every few months I will resurface again and remind the group how their illegal activities affect fellow CBers. I have shut down several forums dealing with CB amps and have reported many illegal CB businesses to the FCC. I will never stop.

How many radios have you seen that have no cross talk from one sideband to the other(on the same channel)?
I had one and an friend and I got on the same channel, on opposite sidebands, and pointed 4 element beams at one anothers locations.
Anyone care to guess the results?

Proud to be equal. George has obviously decided to be a "freeposter". Like freebanders, he has decided that the rules don't apply to him, are inconvenient, and he can have more fun by not abiding by them, or by "fudging" them.

Just like keyclowns who have decided CB is "all about competition" and "not for the weak", George has decided that this newsgroup is "all about competition". If you can't compete, tough noogies: you're the newsgroup version of a "mud duck" and you get slapped down.

The keyclowns say "stop cryin and start buyin" to anyone that complains about their overpowered signals. George says "stop gripin and start typin" to those who complain about his "freeposting" habits.

Get it?

Yup; it applied to Aanal Aaron H. Voobner, which is why everyone here laughed him off the newsgroup. It applies to Georgie-girl Busch. It applies to Douggie-style Adairierre. It even applies to Frankie Gilliland.

Now repeat after me: NOBODY IS BUYING ALL THE HOT AIR THAT YOU BLOW. JUST BECAUSE YOU SAY IT DOESN'T MAKE IT SO! And repeat.

why not just find a NiMi battery pack made for cordless phones, some are pre-wired with little plugs, cut the plug off, solder it in

I have an old Uniden PC33 that keeps burning out speakers. I opened it up and checked the voltage from the speaker leads. It's 14 volts with the mike unkeyed. Goes to 0 when the mike is keyed. I'm not that familiar with the electrics in CBs, but I'm pretty sure that there shouldn't be that much voltage coming from the speaker leads. Any ideas.
Thanks,
Mike

Where and when did I say that? And why does it matter? As far as I know (or care) you could indeed be Roger Wiseman. You could also be Jeb Bush, Martha Stewart, or Pellets the Wonder Rabbit. Fact is that you are nobody until you at least claim to be somebody. And we both know that will never happen. So even if I did suggest that you might be Roger Wiseman (who happens to be -somebody-), you make yourself look even more foolish by reiterating that you, by choice, have no identity. You are a nobody. A big fat zero. Chuckle, chuckle, giggle, giggle.

That's all it is, Twisty -- a theory. Now you need to learn how to seperate theory from fact, or at least use facts to support the theory. You have failed miserably trying to prove your other 'theories', so maybe you better not even try this time. But I certainly won't mind if you really want to try, since you always end up disproving yourself anyway -- LOL!!!

Really? I don't seem to remember that one. But I do seem to remember that professional journalists usually have similar backgrounds and educations, part of which is composition. They learn it, they practice it, they live it and breathe it, because it's their livelyhood. You, OTOH, have demonstrated a complete lack of both education and practice in the field. You, Twisty, are not a professional journalist, but rather you are an amateur liar (and a bad one to boot!).

"transferred from Latin"? Do you realize that the word 'transferred' necessarily means that the previous owner (Latin) is no longer in possession of whatever was 'transferred' (the 'rule'). And didn't you ever learn the difference between past- and present-tense? Obviously not. How about trying something like, "....was adopted from Latin"?

The practice may be common, but so is farting. Do you impress people by farting? Well, maybe in your corner of the country farting might be used as a sign of respect, but not here.

Hence the word origin: 'pre-' = before, and 'position' = place. IOW, the word 'preposition' means 'to place before'.

Why not? e.g, "Twisty's grammar is getting so bad that he sounds more and more foolish with each passing week, and any new person in the newsgroup will eventually come to that very same conclusion."

> or if the pronoun is omitted, then the preposition must >occur at the end: "The real radio technician corrected the mistakes in >the books that Sparky scribbled in", or "YOU are the troll we spoke of."

A preposition is a connecting word, and is used for the sake of the words being connected, -not- for the sake of itself. If there are no words to be connected (as in any case where a noun or pronoun, or even the verb, is omitted or implied), then there is nothing to connect, and no need for a preposition. Example [omission in brackets]: "Twisty continues to launch insults at me, but if he really thought I was someone else (as he has claimed countless times) he would have abandoned such futile attempts [to insult me]." Otherwise, the sentence should be constructed to include the connected words: e.g, "YOU are the troll of whom we spoke."

>English lesson over.

And if you still don't understand [it] [the subject], you can always validate your educational deficit by claiming 'creative license'. Now put a lid on it before you prove yourself even more ignorant than you have already proven [yourself to be].

Professional journalists avoid overusing words. Using the same words over and over when there are other words that could be used demonstrates a lack of creativity and originality, and the reader quickly loses interest. That's Journalism 101, Twist. And that's why nobody reads your posts anymore, because everyone knows that all they will read is the same old diatribe of you calling people lids and whining about their deficits. I read them because I enjoy watching you make a fool of yourself. Keep up the good work!

That may not be an issue in this case. I have two Uniden radios that use the BP-180 battery pack. Both are SC180B scanners that I bought on clearance from Best Buy, and neither came with the power adapter. From the operating guide that I downloaded, I know that the proper power adapter is the AD-70U power adapter, which is supposed to supply 300 mA at 12 volts DC. Since the battery pack supplies 4.8 volts DC, I suspect that there is an internal voltage regulator in the scanner that controls the voltage supplied to the battery pack as the cells charge. I believe the same circuitry exist in the other Uniden radios that use this battery pack.

I use a 9 volt DC power adapter that came from a telephone answering machine. I'm sure I scavenged it from the trash.

Does Uniden supply a NiMH battery pack intended to replace the BP-180? If so, and if Uniden does not recommend a different power adapter, I would feel safe in using NiMH cells in my SC180B. Interested listers may want to connect a voltmeter and ammeter to their scanner and see what happens as they charge up a NiMH battery pack.

Best wishes.

Someone mentioned checking the pile of dead batteries at the local Shack. My stop netted one Mitsumi connector.

Would anyone else be interested in an 1850 mAh BP-180 battery?

It's just as much trouble to set up to make one, as it is to make many.

You should have ZERO volts DC on the speaker leads.
If you get sound, probably the blocking cap is shorted.
If you don't get any sound, the amp chip is toast.
The blocking cap is usually an electrolytic, somewhere between 200 and 100uF, close to the amp chip.

The big question is: Why aren't you blowing the fuse, too?

My initial thought was "It's an old radio. The speaker just went out." I've never had that happen, but I think that this is the oldest radio that I've ever owned. I replaced the speaker with one from Radio Shack. Next day it crackled and then stopped working.
I finally blew the fuse when I plugged in my external speaker from the unit in my truck. Glad that happened instead of it wasting my speaker.
Thanks for the help. Like I said, I don't know a whole lot about them so this one will probably end up in the bottom of my tool box.

They are just withdrawing the old UK only frequencies, the European spec (26.965 to 27.405MHz) will still be legal to use. All the CBs that cover the old UK band (including dual banders) will be illegal to use... even though they are still in the shops now.
I don't know what date they will stop the sale of these CBs, but the use of them should become illegal in 2010.

They are also planning to withdraw the licence requirement. What it looks like they are doing is issuing licences until the middle of this year, and totally removing the licensing a year after that. This is so that licences issued now will run for a year.
By the middle of next year, all licences should be finished. So, like you, we will have a free CB service.

The third change is the authority. The RA are to be replaced with "Ofcom". We are still waiting to hear about SSB but, once Ofcom take over, I would imagine that it will get forgotten.

I am just about to upload a new site at http://www.citizensband.co.uk/, dedicated to CB in the UK, which will give all the latest info on CB over here.

Regards,

Peter.

A "poor man's repair" might be to place a 10uf non polar capacitor in series with the speaker lead. ... if you can't find the source of the "reported problem."

You might/probably be dealing a hybrid or bridge hybrid audio amplifier

Sounds like he does have a bridge amp in the audio that has a shorted coupling capacitor. That NP 10uF should fix the problem.

Non-Polarized is not needed. If hooked up correctly, there will never be a negative peak excursion, since the amp chip usually works against ground.
200 - 1000uf would be a better choice.

Good luck on the sale of this antenna. I'm sure someone will think it is worth $125.00. New in the box..maybe.

For those who are not fortunate to win this bid, let me expound on some history for you...

Jay in the Mojave has always been a BIG fan of the Super Penetrator 500. Even though I have tried to convince him that the Avanti Sigma 5/8 is a better antenna, for MANY reasons, he still hung true to the SP500.

Well, wanting to have a better antenna and knowing that one was not available, I decided that I would dupicate the Sigma 5/8 and build them myself. Little did I know, Jay was thinking the same thing about the SP500. The difference is Jay actually worked on his and I only talked about it.

Jay did some initial tests in order to improve on the SP500, most importantly to the feedpoint. We sent e-mails back and forth where I informed him that I didn't think the SP500 design was good because the "hairpin" (and later, the "trombone") was in the VERTICAL plane and could affect the wave pattern of the antenna. The ring on the sigma (which is NOTHING like the ring on the Maco) is only there to take the 5/8 antenna to 6/8 which is required to properly "feed" this antenna. This "ring" is in the horizontal plane so as not to affect the vertical plane of the antenna! Bet you didn't know that!

Well, the original "modified" SP500 became the Mastadon 5000. But, Jay was still not happy. Armed with new information and a WHOLE LOTA trail and air, the VERTCAL trombone became horizontal (way to go Jay) and a second one was born. Further tests showed an increase in radiated field strength (due to the elimination of the lossy feedpoint you get on the SP500 ;-) and it clearly outperformes the Sigma, SP500 and Maco (which were all used to test against)! This antenna became the Interceptor 10K you hear so much about!

The Super Penetrator 500 is a good antenna! The Interceptor 10K is by far, superior. There is a hitch though (isn't there always?); quality is not cheap, but membership has it's privleges!

IF...you want...the BEST 5/8 wave omni directional antenna built today, there is only one choice...the Interceptor 10K. At $250.00, it can't be beat!

http://www.a1antennas.com/

Dino
(who is in no way affiliated with Jay nor does he make ANY money off the sales of this antenna. I paid for mine, just like you!)

1. You got caught spoofing, live with it.
2. The discussion in question is whether to recommend a Tech ticket to a newbie -- given that the code requirement is going to be with us for some years. I would not, any more than I would lead him to an open elevator shaft. What Techs do is not of giant interest so long as it does not have an effect on me. Do not overestimate your importance in the giant scheme of things.
3. I will admit to confusion but I am my usual cynical-chic (thank you, confusion comes from your spoofing.

It hasn't been a bad year for sports, in this area. All 3 Teams, (Flyers, Sixers, Eagles) all made the Playoffs and all went to next round in playoffs.
We usually have teams in the playoffs every year just been kinda hard to win the whole damn thing. I am actually almost closer to the NJ teams as they play in Rutherford and it is about an hour and a half ride, East. So all the teams in this area are in the playoffs or finals, Philly about an hour - ten.south

I too watched as the issue unfolded, and it's not like you are a victim here. I seem to recall that not only did you mount a campaign (as N7VCF) of accusing me of the horrific crime of child molestation, but you also threatened to kill a couple people as 1mangang, and even threatened me via email as the same. And you were caught in your 1mangang campaign long before the first forgeries you claim were from Leland. So don't EVEN suggest that Dick was somehow on YOUR side.

And you know what? The original post that you claim was a forgery by Leland isn't in the archive. No post, and therefore no header. Even if it had a header, it was posted through Cotse (the same service you used for your N7VCF forgeries accusing me of child molestation), so there was no way to factually determine who posted it. It could have been posted by Leland, but then it could have been posted by you trying to frame Leland, which is certainly not beyond your technical experience (as you have proven so many times with your own crap in this newsgroup), and framing someone is certainly not beneath you (since you have done much worse). So, as far as the FACTS are concerned, NOTHING was ever proven -- by you, by Dick, or by anyone else.

But now you have the balls to justify your own forging because someone forged you -- just like a spoiled little baby -- you steal candy from another because someone stole your's (that you stole in the first place). Go cry about it somewhere else.

Pay attention, shithead: I never said his word wasn't good, I said he only made the same observation, and came to the same conclusion that you did (at your prompting, I might add). Wipe the tears from your eyes and read his post again:

His beliefs were based on the same "proof" that you pointed out in the alleged forgery. But if you want to use Dick's actual words, notice that he characterized Leland's activities as "spoofing". He didn't say "threatening to kill" or "wrongfully accuse of child molestation" or "spamming the newsgroup with obscenities". He said "spoofing". That's all. And he DEFINITELY wasn't supporting YOU, he had a disagreement with Leland. Again, that's not PROOF. And again, you are clinging to the shirt-tail of a good man because you don't have a leg to stand on yourself. Eat shit and die, Twist.

That wasn't a threat, oh shit-talking troll hiding behind an anonymous nic accusing others of being a coward. You should know what a threat is by now, since you made so many as 1mangang. What a piece of shit you are, crying about how you were victimized by Leland, and now trying to act like you are being victimized by me. Do you really want me to threaten you like you did to me and a few others in this newsgroup? Then beg for it, Twist!

Has anyone determined what resistor to replace to increase the current to about 120 mA? There is a 27 ohm, 1 watt flameproof resistor on the board connected to the power jack. Would replacing that help?

You say Dick proved that Leland forged you (call 1-800-WAAAAAH), but there is no post by him with such proof. Now he may be gone, but it's clear that he can still speak for himself:

Don't put words in my mouth you presumptious twit!

1. Twist is not fun. I am here for fun. So I don't read much on the subject at all.

2. Things are perfectly capable of happening without my blessing or permission so there are any number of things I do not instantly judge. If I have an opinion and it serves any purpose to air it, believe me you will hear it.

3. As I do not run my life by taking a vote, I have no expectation that anyone else does or should. The entire Chinese Army's opinion on anything is noise. Even their opinion carries more weight than some multi-personality Lifer Tech carrying on a crusade to avoid a simple-minded code test. Judge and be damned!

You couldn't have referenced anybody else, could you? You just had to spin the words of a nice guy that can no longer set you straight as he had done so many times before, or so you thought. You coudn't let the man rest, you just HAD to drag him into your little newsgroup skirmish. But you didn't even consider that he had already responded to idiots that try to twist his words for the benefit of winning their little games! Oh yeah, one more thing: Even Dick McCollum had the integrity to put his name to his words. That's because he was a man, not a cartoon character such as yourself.

You have proven that you are a pathetic low-life, Twist. You live with the unspeakable creatures that feed upon things which should be left to them. One of these days someone you know is going to realize this and come forward with your real name, and I'm just going to sit back and laugh as all your bullshit comes back and slams you right into the gutter you came from!

See, your rage and ignorance blinds you. "I" wasn't even in the equation,,,,that thread was from a hammie room, where, if you remember, Lelnad begged me to follow him to for a long time. Lelnad begged me to take my debate there and when I refused, he resorted to forging me there, the lowlife he is. I wasn't there when Dick pointed it out, as I don't post in hammie rooms (save a few to alert those to his forges AFTER Dick busted him and alerted me). The disagreement was Lelnad lying and Dick calling him on it and telling him to get over himself....you have sever emotional problems to take everything so personal,,you say Dick

So they say, and Ronaldinho to replace him.
His daddy says that beckums doesn't want to go to play games wiv dem nasty foreigners.

That will be the second time that Fergie has given him the boot :~)

I don't get it... Becks for £30million, Ronaldinho just £9million... why don't Barca tell Fergie to keep Becks, they'll take 3 Ronaldinhos instead... then use the change to buy a couple of ozzies in the next Leeds United sale.

Speaking of Leeds... I hear that Sadam Insane's daughters want to live there. I am sure that must be because they love the Brits, who just helped kick their daddy's butt and took them from riches to poverty.
But then, with 10 children, no husbands, and our social security system which rewards single mothers for dumping their husbands (or having their daddy murder them)... they would soon be back to riches.

Maybe they would live in Beckingham Palace... the Beckhams wont be needing
it ;~)

YOU are the one who brought up his name in the first place, YOU are the one that claimed he PROVED Leland forged your nic when he did not, and YOU are the only one that is still whining about being forged years later. So DON'T lay any of your crap on ME!

BULLSHIT, Twist!!! You have been whining, griping and crying about Leland in just about every post for the past three years!!!

> but try not to lose sight of the issue, >Frankie,,you're saying Dick did not see it the way I presented it and I >clearly showed that he did, indeed.

Wrong! You said he PROVED that Leland was forging you. The facts show that HE DIDN'T PROVE ANYTHING! He just AGREED with your conclusion, and you stretched the meaning of his words to assign some kind of definitive declaration in order to bolster your argument. And you become even more offensive with each post in this thread as you keep spinning this right back to him! Stand your own two feet and LET THE MAN REST IN PEACE!!!

MORE bullshit. Anyone can go to google, look up 1mangang@my-deja.com and see for themselves. The IP is exactly the same as your webtv IP at the same time, and so is all the references to "chickenhawks" by both of your 'characters'. You got caught and 1mangang disappeared. Same deal with N7VCF@Cotse.com, and you might have gotten away with that because cotse sets the no-archive flag, except you screwed up and got caught again, and again the character disappeared. But I saved all those posts, Twist. Your 'chickenhawk' is cooked!

>Hahha,,I see that,,and he didn't say RF pirates affects him daily in his >work.

No he didn't. I did. They do. You keep harping on the subject like it was something more than what I said. I never addressed it because your ranting about it just adds to your self-demonstrated ignorance. But if you want to address it now, my response is, "It's true. What's your point?"

<snip more whining>

>See, your rage and ignorance blinds you. "I" wasn't even in the

>Dick
>wasn't supporting me..I wasnt even there, dummy, He was letting everyone >else know Lelnad was acting out again.

For starters, there is no "You ask w" posted or referenced in any other newsgroup. Not in any post by you, Leland, Dick, or anyone else. If this "hammie room" wasn't a newsgroup, then either post a link to the particular archive.

Next, you were confronted with the FACTS; namely, that Leland ALWAYS posted his sig beginning with a quotation mark ["You ask what Morse Code....], which your 'proof' doesn't have. But your 'proof' DOES have hyphens ["--"] before the sig, which Leland never used. Here's the explanation:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=0hpB6.45236%24Os.9380428%40news1.rdc2.pa.home.com

And how did you respond to that post? You snipped the logical explanation (gee, what a suprise) and posted another of your hateful diatribes:

"Leland is guilty. Leland is a forger. Leland is a liar. Leland is one of your partners in crime. Leland is no damn good. You coming to his aid solidifies and reiterates everything I have said. Go lance a boil."

You have been whining ever since. And now you drag Dick's good name through the mud to support your delusion. You just don't have any boundries, do you?

>> Again, that's not PROOF.
>You appear to feel it is in your blasphemous accusations of me. The door >swing both ways and you always get your tail caught and then cry about >it.,,,and attack.

The door has swung back on you lots of times, which is why you are constantly whining about Leland. You are just too dumb to realize it. It got you so obsessed that you thought everybody was Leland, especially me. And when you couldn't accept that I wasn't a Leland forgery, you accused me of being all kinds of people. It's all in the archives on Google, assuming you can read without being blinded by your obsession with Leland.

Back to the ISP routine again. If you can't spin the subject with that you try the "...affects my work" routine, or the "you accused me of living in WV" spin. You just can't address the facts, can you?

Using what proof? Are going to look for a post by Dick that says I threatened you? When you take a break from rummaging through the archives, maybe you should look around at the REAL world and learn that people like you eventually hurt themselves by their own actions -- I don't have to do a thing cause you are doing it to yourself. Besides, how am I going to hurt you if I don't even know who you are? Sure, Twist, you go right ahead and prove that I threatened you, and I'll just keep bringing up all your posts as 1mangang and N7VCF.

I've been trying to decide which CB to buy. I've been looking at the Cobra 29LTD (The Harley-Davidson Edition) and the Uniden PC78XL. I would guess that they are probably the same radio with just a few changes, but I don't know for sure. I've read that the Uniden are suppose to have a little bit better quality control, but I have also heard that they come from the same factory.
So the question is, which one should I get, or does it really matter?
Thanks in advance
Lonnie

Can anyone tell if they make a antenna matcher that will handle 1kw,
Or what should be used when running a amp?

thanks

He claimed that I post pornography. Never have.
He claimed that I am part of a conspiracy against him. No, but if anyone knows of one I might join.
He claimed that I accused him of child molestation. Wasn't me.
He claimed that I accused him of homosexuality. Wrong person again.
He claimed that I was female. Well, if he can't tell by my pic....
He claimed that I was Leland Scott. Nope, not me.
He claimed that I forged posts in his 'name'. Wrong forger.
He claimed that I was Glenn Sparks. Never been to Texas.
He claimed that I "insinuated" that I was Glenn Sparks. I'm not even a ham.
He claimed that I made up a news story about a CBer sued by his neighbor. I posted and referenced the story.
He claimed that I lived in Issaquah. Never been there, either.
He claimed that -I- said I lived in Issaquah. Never said it.
He claimed that I was Big Ben. Wrong side of the State.
He claimed that -I- said Issaquah was "local" to Spokane. He just got his lies mixed up.
He claimed that I was N7VCF. Nope, and the pics prove it.
He claimed that -I- claimed to be N7VCF. Never did.
He claimed that -he never- claimed I was N7VCF. He can't keep his lies straight.
He claimed that I am a child molester. Bad form, Twist.
He claimed that I am Aaron Voobner. Nope, but I can send him an email if anyone wants him back.
He claimed that I don't have a base antenna. Always had at least one in the air since 1977.
He claimed that I own a Japanese car. Never have, just old Dodges and a Ford.
He claimed that, "If I am wrong, I can admit it." That turned out to be the biggest lie of all.

And that's all I can remember from the FIRST year!

down to $40 here on the westcoast. Anybody need one?

$40.oo bucks thats outrageous. you can get 1 at the WELFARE office for nothing.

Why even go to that extent? Some hammies just let their buddies use their call..just like they do on the repeaters with the wives..see, the "wife" on the repeater has a bunch of different voices and talks to different husbands, but the call remains constant. The late great Dick McCollum even offered up his call to a few freebanders "in case they work anything real exotic"..the post is in there somewhere.

==========

No it isn't, you disgusting slob. I have read many posts by him stating how he elmered many freebanders, helping them to get their licenses. He stated constantly how easy it was to get a license so people DON'T have to freeband, and especially pushing people to pass the code test. But NOWHERE could I find ANY post where he offered the use of his callsign by illegal operators "in case they work anything real exotic", not in quote nor in color. And I hardly think that an Extra would let any freebander use his call to operate outside of the amateur bands, especially one who was as proud of his license as he was. Once again you misrepresented Dick to promote your own self-interests.

And yes, I'm going to keep looking for more of your perverse misrepresentations.
So stay tuned, cause I'm thinking about putting up a page on my site that portrays you as you really are, using nothing but your own posts!

of technical voodoo. There is almost no discussion of the intended and practical uses of CB radio, the fundamental purpose of which is easy-to-use, low-power, license-free radio communication. Instead, discussions are about using the band for RF drag racing, and by wannabe-hams that are too lazy to get their license. From participating in this newsgroup, it

Hello Scott:

Yes the Interceptor 10K uses a fixed Impedance Matching Circuit, at the antenna, so its a fixed remote matching device. Would be neat to have a remote controlled matching device, like a remote controlled "Antenna Tuner" that would allow the antenna to be tuned over the entire HF Band, or at least where it would work. I'll call it "Tune-O-Matic, he he he.

Got a 20 meter verison on the drawing board, man is it big! That would be neat to have a remote antenna tuner on that, may not be a bad call, since the much larger antenna will need a tower that would allow the mounting of a remote antenna tuner, yeah.......

l. You got caught spoofing, live with it.

2. The discussion in question is whether to recommend a Tech ticket to a newbie -- given that the code requirement is going to be with us for some years. I would not, any more than I would lead him to an open elevator shaft. What Techs do is not of giant interest so long as it does not have an effect on me. Do not overestimate your importance in the giant scheme of things.
3. I will admit to confusion but I am my usual cynical-chic (thank you, Len) self overflowing with calmnity and dignitude. Most of the confusion comes from your spoofing.
Dick NØBK

Check the thread, Frankie,,I was nowhere in the hammie room to make any "conclusion". Dick made it on his own based on his expertise and knowledge of Lelnad and his lowlife actions. Gee Frankie, that illustrates that you maliciously lied against me by claiming that Dick agreed with me at my coaxing.....I wasn't even present in the conversation. Now why would you go to such lengths to lie about me,,,hmm?
You also snipped the only cb relevant part of the post,,your drunken rants about RF "pirates" (lol) affecting you in your daily work.

I'm not the only one here who knows Dick alerted everyone to Lelnad's forges.

Of course I did, to counteract your fallacy, but make no mistake, it is YOU countering his word, YOU questioning his integrity. Dick wasn't looked upon as the wise old sage in this group for nothing. His opinion, and his word, were valued by those who know. We didn't require "proof" you've already repaired them? LOL.

><snip more whining>

At least you are consistent with your hypocrisy.

See, your rage and ignorance blinds you. "I" wasn't even in the equation,,,,that thread was from a hammie room, where, if you remember, Lelnad begged me to follow him to for a long time. Lelnad begged me to take my debate there and when I refused, he resorted to forging me there, the lowlife he is. I wasn't there when Dick pointed it out, as I don't post in hammie rooms (save a few to alert those to his forges AFTER Dick busted him and alerted me). The disagreement was Lelnad lying and Dick calling him on it and telling him to get over himself....you have sever emotional problems to take everything so personal,,you say Dick
wasn't supporting me..I wasnt even there, dummy, He was letting everyone else know Lelnad was acting out again.

>For starters, there is no "You ask w" posted or >referenced in any other newsgroup.

Which has absolutely nothing to do with Dick pointing out Lelnad's forges except in passing reference. It was but one of a number of things
I am absolutely certain Dick would have ascertained before accusing Lelnad publically of forging. Certainly Dick could not have been influenced by a single accusation from myself, in the manner you demonstrate lack of self-control. Do you not give the man that credit?

>Not in any vehemently he was wrong and you are right about Lelnad..

>You just don't have any boundries, do you?

What I do or don't is none of your damn business. You have a mild retardation going on that is responsible for such infantile-like syndromes, but I have never come across one exactly like yours that allows for a total stranger, on the internet, no less, to obsess you to the point of drunken insanity.

>Again, that's not PROOF.

And again, none of us asked Dick for proof,,we knew his word was good.

You appear to feel it is in your blasphemous accusations of me. The door swing both ways and you always get your tail caught and then cry about it.,,,and attack.

>The door has swung back on you lots of times, >which is why you are constantly whining about >Leland.

Legitimate gripes. If you wish, you can so choose to embarass him by insisting I repost such drivel, but you would be much better served in email with your personal problems.. not on this group. Rats don;t like to drown alone..I see you wish to involve yourself with Lelnad's forging and act as some sort of mouthpice of defense for him....reprehensible, and as bad as him defending N8 for breaking federal law. We can post Lelnad's posting portals and accesses, the amount of time he used them prior to having them pulled for noncompliance of Terms of service rules,, their costs, their free trial periods, couple them with the termination emails I still have, and you can do the math from there,,,,well, maybe you can't, but the rest of the group can.

>You are just too dumb to realize it.

So I'm dumb, and I'm a big fat zero. You're still left with the man in the mirror at the end of the day, and it's quite clear, you are not happy with what you see. The need for condescension to another is but a mere symptom of your diseases.

>It got you so obsessed that you thought >everybody was Leland, especially me.

>blinded by your obsession with Leland.

Dupilicit and redundant posting,,you're very upset because you're not in on the joke...some day, perhaps when you grow up, you may crack the loop, but for now, you must be content on the outside, looking in, like a young lad on a hot summer day with his drooling mug placed against an ice cream sandwich parlor's plate glass window, longing for something he can never have...LOL.

>clinging to the shirt-tail of a good man

Thing is, not one person besides yourself cares about such things as identity. You're ate up with it.

>because you don't have a leg to stand on >yourself. Eat shit and die, Twist.

That's the lid we all know...
You're the one taking issue with what he said. I used him for the same reason that has you hot,,,,,he WAS a good man, and his word will always be above your sullied, soiled, destroyed reputation..it;s why you can't hold an isp..you;re a hypocritical lid.

>Back to the ISP routine again.

And you're bcak to google again...

>if you can't spin

>the subject with that you try the "...affects my >work" routine, or the "you accused me of living >in WV" spin.

It's not spin,,it's exactly what you said...live with it.

> You just can't address the facts,

>can you?

Fact: You're mildly retarded, suffering from a communication deficit that has you preferring to obsess on my personal life rather than obey the faqs of the ng. Fact: You did indeed claim such nonsense concerning RF pirates affecting your work daily and accusing me of being a hammie in WV by the name of Wiseman...deal with it, liar.

And therein is another of your problems, Frankie. Impotence. Your lack of control has you so beside yourself,,,you're always interested in telling another

>Besides, how am I going to hurt you if I don't >even know who you are?

Ahhh..gotta love that intellect,,,,threats,,,,"gonna come back at me"........"someone's gonna find your real name" ,,,"hurt you"....... Gee Frankie,,,,the word "hurt" was never mentioned, although I am worried that if you were to come down here, you might drink too much.

In <28807-3EE0D00E-397@storefull-2313.public.lawson.webtv.net>, twistedhed@webtv.net (Twistedhed) did a piss-poor job of selective editing in order to defend his lies when, for example, he wrote:

>>Next, you were confronted with the FACTS;
>
>>namely, that Leland ALWAYS posted his sig
>Sure.When he wasnt forging or shilling. Non-consequential.

You snipped the relevant part: "...Leland ALWAYS posted his sig BEGINNING WITH A QUOTATION MARK...which your 'proof' DOESN'T HAVE." Just another case of your selective editing, which has been your modus operandi from the beginning. And just like everything else you write, it has as much credibility as Bill Clinton in a whore-house. Contrary to your delusions, I'm not defending Leland -- in fact, you know that "saucer men" post? If you had any brains you would have used the message ID to look up the post, and you would have found that the -real-post is totally different than what Leland quoted. And again, contrary to your delusions, I'm not discrediting Dick -- it's clear he believed that Leland was the forger, and he may indeed have been right. But here's a news flash for you, Twisty: Dick wasn't a god, and he made mistakes once in a while. Dick posted his opinion, but that doesn't qualify as PROOF just because it happened to come from Dick, or just because his opinion reinforced your obsession with Leland. EVEN IF Leland DID forge that post, the more plausible explanation of why "You know w" was left behind is in the post which I linked and you snipped, which may ALSO have been written by Leland. But you just throw logic and reason right out the window and work to condemn him by any means possible, which ruined any credibility you had. Kinda like the OJ trial -- it didn't matter if he was innocent or guilty, the problem was that the investigation was botched and evidence was falsified. Maybe you should get a job with the LAPD. When you do, swing by my neighborhood and take Mark Fuhrman with you -- we have enough racists around here already, and you two should have a lot to talk about.

No it doesn't, and I made no such claim. I quoted that particular post to point out that "he had already responded to idiots that try to twist his words for the benefit of winning their little games", which was a little something I wrote that you deliberately pulled out of context, mainly because it applies to you as much as anyone, and so does his post. You know, there's another thing about Dick that is totally opposite of yourself (besides being a real person with a real name): He never ripped apart anyone's posts piece by piece and attacked the pieces outside of the context in which they were written. Oh yeah, and he never needed to rely on the credibility of anyone else, including a dead man.

New way of marketing. Most folks have seen the inside of a radio; I'd prefer a shot of the test equipment. It better be something more than a DVM, 200 watt soldering iron, and a big screwdriver - oh, and a hammer :)

I had often wondered about putting a stepper motor into a yagi or vertical and now someone is doing exactly that. The things will adjust the element and boom lengths for wherever you transmit as long as it is within the range of the device (I think they run between 13 and 30 MHz). Danged pricey, however.

Well, I looked at my post again with some scrutiny, and I do see that I made a mistake. I said, "He claimed that -I- said Issaquah was 'local' to Spokane", which was wrong: actually he claimed that -I- was local to -Issaquah-, because I said the CBer lawsuit case was "local" and he ASSumed that I was referring to a similar case in Issaquah, even though I had said many times before that I live in Spokane. Now that I think about it, he never did acknowledge the news article I posted and referenced, even though he said he would admit he was wrong if I did. Just goes to show you that Twistedhed is a loser, a liar, and will never be capable of admitting his mistakes.

Thanks, Shark.

Usually he was, especially about technical and political issues. But then he got caught up in the forgery game that several people were playing here, probably because he was beta-testing his friends killfile software, BozoFlush. So at least he tried to get things right amidst all that confusion, which is more than anyone can say about Twisty who just added to the confusion with a few of his own 'personalities'.

Bush orders broad review of radio airwaves use

WASHINGTON (AP) President Bush ordered a broad review Thursday of how government and industry can better use radio airwaves, which are growing congested by signals from cell phones, wireless gadgets and the military.

Bush directed the Commerce Department to lead the yearlong initiative and produce recommendations for legislation and other policy changes to promote more efficient use of airwaves.

The radio spectrum is a ''vital and limited national resource'' needed for economic growth, scientific research and homeland security, Bush said.

''The existing legal and policy framework for spectrum management has not kept pace with the dramatic changes in technology,'' Bush said in a memo to federal agencies. ''We must unlock the economic value and entrepreneurial potential of U.S. spectrum assets while ensuring that sufficient spectrum is available to support critical government functions.''

Bush said the way government now reviews every change in airwaves use is ''a process that is often slow and inflexible and can discourage the introduction of new technology.''

The Commerce Department is to hold a series of public meetings to develop recommendations for airwaves use by local governments and industry. To study federal spectrum use, that department will guide a task force that includes representatives from more than a dozen executive branch departments and agencies.

The cell phone and wireless industries, in need of increasing amounts of airwaves space, welcomed the announcement.

''This is probably the most comprehensive look at spectrum policy the government has ever taken,'' said Tom Wheeler, president of the Cellular Telecommunications & Internet Association. ''The tools we have for formulating spectrum policy are broken and we look forward to working with the task force.''

The Federal Communications Commission, which oversees U.S. airwaves not used by the federal government, will have a consulting role in the review.

In April, the FCC doubled the airwaves available for emergency and public safety workers, giving a boost to police seeking better crisis communications and firefighters wanting to send video from inside burning buildings.

The agency decided last month to allow cell phone companies and others to lease unused portions of their airwaves, letting them make deals for slices of spectrum to fill cell phone dead zones or provide wireless services to certain locations for limited times.

Well, if they decide that cell phones will perform well in the 26-28MHz range then I think we should worry...
Otherwise, what does this article have to do with CB?

The one thing going for CB radio is the fact that the frequencies in question suck... the public basically got the garbage heap of unused frequencies.
It's doubtful they'd be useful for anything else... in fact, most of the owners of the 'freeband' frequencies have already moved on to a more reliable spectrum due to their unreliability.

I really don't see the Bush administration cracking down on CBers, but we'll find out in a few weeks I guess.

because someone says something doesn't mean it's true (gee, seems I have heard

Thomas Paine was an opportunistic limey that came here just months before the Revolutionary War to sell pop-philosophy that favored the war, and left a few years later with a wad of American cash. Ironically, his concepts of freedom were so highly regarded by Washington that the General forced his troops to read Paine's book.

Now WTF does any of that have to do with you trying to ride the credibility of Dick McCollum?

I have never said that I have lived anywhere other than Spokane, and I haven't (except where I was stationed in the USMC). Just another lie to add to your rapidly growing list.

> But the odd thing
>is,,,if you are speaking of second case,,,post it.

You are confused once again, so I will clarify. In chronological order:

1. I claimed that there was a "local" case where a CBer got sued by his neighbor.

2. You ASSumed that I was Big Ben based on a post you found where he describes a similar case in Clark County.

3. You concluded that I was Big Ben and that I lived in Clark County.

4. I denied it.

5. You called me a liar.

6. I laughed hard.

7. I posted the article to which I originally referred, which was the case in Spokane, not Clark County. Here's the whole thread:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&threadm=3ade1b9d.77554%40news.cet.com&rnum=5&prev=/groups%3Fq%3D%2B%2522Kathy%2BMulady%2522%2Bgroup:rec.radio.cb%26num%3D100%26hl%3Den%26lr%3D%26ie%3DUTF-8%26safe%3Doff%26scoring%3Dd%26filter%3D0

Now we have been through all this before. I tried to explain your confusion but you just came up with more lies:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&threadm=3b3bd1a3.2202876%40news.cet.com&rnum=3&prev=/groups%3Fq%3D%2B%2522Kathy%2BMulady%2522%2Bgroup:rec.radio.cb%26num%3D100%26hl%3Den%26lr%3D%26ie%3DUTF-8%26safe%3Doff%26scoring%3Dd%26filter%3D0

Notice that Message 3 is where you accuse me of being N7VCF, which I point out because his website is no longer at that URL. It's interesting how you abandoned the idea that I was Big Ben, yet continued to think I was in Issaquah, even when faced with the proof for which you begged so hard -- the article from where I am "local" -- Spokane. You just can't accept that I have been 100% honest about who I am and where I live. It bothers you so much -- why? Because I'm honest? Are you trying so desperately to catch me in a lie so you can feel good about lying yourself? Or is it just wounded pride that makes you continue to defend this increasing pile of bullshit you created and is now falling down all around you?

And BTW, that thread contains YET ANOTHER of your lies to add to the list -- you accused me of forging one of your own posts!!!

>>Now that I think about it, he never did

The first link above is the thread where I posted the article. There is no post by you in that thread. If you addressed the article it was with your confused rambling in the second thread. I'm sure the confusion is deliberate, because otherwise you would have to admit that not only you were wrong about many things, but that you lied about many things, also. You won't admit your mistakes because you can't.

I have proven you wrong on every count, Twist. Claiming you were never wrong is just another lie to add to the list.

It was his OPINION, one which he never repeated after a sound and logical explanation was posted (which I provided in a previous link that you snipped). Looks like the explanation given in that post was good enough for him, why isn't it good enough for you? It's because you are too obsessed about Leland to give it up!

And to your dislike, I found a couple posts that will most assuredly get your ire up:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=lRhK7.194573%24W8.7299257%40bgtnsc04-news.ops.worldnet.att.net

Wrong. You can accuse anybody you want, and you usually do. But to claim that Dick "proved" your suspicions with nothing more than his opinion is a blatant and disrespectful misinterpretation. Now why is this so hard for you to understand? You have made the same argument countless times to others, why abandon it now? Maybe because you are on the other end of the stick? Typical Twistedhed hypocrisy.

From http://www.a1antennas.com...........

"The I-10K uses a very efficient Impedance Matching System that allows several more dB of transmitted and received signal levels, as compared to other antennas that have lossy Impedance Matching Devices"

Which antennas were used for comparison?
What frequency and mode were used for tests?
What measurement equipment was used for tests?
How was the measurement equipment calibrated?
How many db difference in observed signal levels?

From what i'm told, labor is free...you pay for the parts you toasted!
My guess is you overdrove the amp.
They are simple to repair.
Check the small 10 ohm resisitors on each transistor. If the look like they burned up....replace that transitor and the 10 ohm resisitor...anybody with a soldering iron can do it. And yes...been there...done that!

They make all kinds of tuners. Serious radio op's use a roller inductor tuner not the cheapy ones. They handle serious amounts of power...no problemo!

ENFORCEMENT: LOCAL CHARGES FILED AGAINST OHIO CB OPERATOR

Complaints from a group of neighbors experiencing interference on household appliances from phones and TV sets to baby monitors have resulted in a court case against a citizens band radio operator. Amateur Radio Newsline's David Black, KB4KCH, takes a look at a most interesting case:

On the CB airwaves, he's said to go by the name Sugar Bear. James A Disbennet, of Lancaster, Ohio, faces first degree misdemeanor charges of operating a CB radio exceeding 4 watts. He also faces two counts of operating a CB radio without certification. The Lancaster Eagle Gazette says Disbennet was released on bond after answering a summons in Fairfield County Municipal Court May 20th.

The Lancaster City Council was the first such group in the U-S to pass an ordinance allowing the City to enforce rules set by the FCC governing the strength of CB radios. On April 10th, an assistant superintendent of the City's Electrical, Communications and Signals Department went on a transmitter hunt. The interfering signals were traced to Disbennet's home. The City then obtained a search warrant, with Lancaster police serving the warrant the following day. Officers seized four pieces of CB radio equipment worth more than a thousand dollars.

A trial date has yet to be set. If convicted, Disbennet could be hit with a 1,000 dollar fine and 180 days in jail.
For the Amateur Radio Newsline,

.....hee hee! (s 'bout time)

Fine as long as the operators stay within their own turf--not poaching frequencies that are licensed to others--like the truckers up on 10 Meters.

Lessee, the hams are getting new specific allocations in the 5 MHZ band (60 Meters) to facilitate inter-agency communications with hams. Amateurs will be secondary and use upper sideband only.

Forty meters is about to be "moved" up or down a peg to get rid of the broadcast stations that have plagued hams for years according to IARU.

Jim Haynie is testifying shortly before Congress in support of the Amateur S pectrum Act that is likely to pass. This in recognition of Amateur Radio's record in worldwide humanitarian service and after the events of 9/11. While it is true that we might lose some slices of the gigahertz ranges, they are in now little-used areas. The Spectrum Act will bring a lot of that to a screeching halt.

..............there > is some kind of satifaction in squashing mudducks......i cannot > explain it, ...but there is........i will admit it

...whatever--it takes much more than that to entertain ME. Like courtesy, teaching good usage of a finite resource, elmering, participating in emergency services. Besides,
I still have access to certain US Government frequencies, such as FEMA, USAF, CAP, SHARES--even if ham radio did go away. Don't worry, it won't.

Sorry to disappoint, but things are looking UP, not down.

boy talk about police officers with nothing to do.....man what town was that in.....????? first degree misdemeanor.....what the hell is that???? operating a cb radio without a certification.....man this too much.....pretty soon you are going to have to have a certification to breathe

i disagree jerry.....they are coming and you know it .....sir your service is dying.....like the ole possum sings in his song.....'who's going to fill their shoes'.....sir , the old guys are dying out and there is no interest in the young ranks for radio stuff of any sort.....they like computers.....and why not.....you can get on a computer and talk to anyone in the world anytime.....with no hassle.....yes sir .....jerry...they are coming to get your freqs mainly.....and they will sooner or later.....if there was not a problem then you guys wouldn't have someone in congress speaking up for you, because you guys can see the proverbial writing on the wall.....you will lose.....and.....maybe us too.....

Hello Bomar:

Yeah we have heard ol Blutarski, out there a few times on channel 12, and 38 lower. They quit the entertaining radio traffic.....

He has a friend from his home land, that speaks in the same accent he does. His friends handle is Yuri.

You will hear the following:

Yuri: "No not want European 9mm, Patooowey on 9mm, Yuri want American Made Colt Model 1911A1 .45 Calibre ACP, and extra clips, yes, oh yes is good for Yuri"

So its obvious the boys, Blutarski and Yuri now go shooting, and do not care for the 9mm calibre.

Blutarski: "Still looking for Moose and Squirrel, is Ten-4, yes"

And it seems they visit the VFW at times, as they put it "Is yes cursing 4 checks yes Ten-4, Baby Baby Baby, in 1964 Buick Skylark, yes is fine American Car" "Holds more Beer, Whine, Ice, and Stop&Go Hot Dogs than ol country 1 cyclender Soviet Union Poop Motorcycle Car, is yes"

Keep an ear on channel 12 AM, or 38 LSB, its a crack up. (Humor)

The fact that the site is back up is just like the war on drugs. You chase them out of one neighborhood and they just set up shop someplace else. Twirted can spend his every waking moment in tracking down the site and it's owners, shut them down, and find it back up again elsewhere a day or so later. Also not every ISP is going to be so quick to shut a site down. Some just don't give a flip, look at all of the porn sites out there. The Twirted humor site isn't nearly as bad as some of the sites out there, hates groups etc., and those sites aren't shut down permanently. If Twirted wants to end his misery he would have better luck jumping over the dike in to the Florida swamp, and sacrifice himself to a big fat hungry alligator.

However, legal access to lower frequencies also nets you much more consistent DX if that is what you are into. Even the low end of 'freebanding' is highly subject to the need for good ionization of the F layer. Sporadic E occurs, but is seldom good for more than a thousand miles or so. One will need that license for, say, 20 meters. Access to higher frequencies will also net you much more consistent access for those 20 - 80 miles 'local' chews (as will access to even lower frequencies; 4 MHz and below)

you can read the entire antennas history thru the google archives of this group including all the testing results as they happened and all the reports by people who were using test models and everything else. jay's probably too busy making a good antenna to respond to the question but do a little homework and you'll answer your own questions.

I know Jerry's writing can cause some flames; however, you should know that interference complaints can cause problems for licensed amateurs as well. When I was chief engineer of a commercial broadcast station many moons ago, I received a call from an irate individual that our FM station was 'all over the place'. I used a monitor and started tuning around - no, we were only where we were supposed to be. He wouldn't let it go. Obviously, he was in a very strong signal area and something had changed - either his radio or there may have been a bad connection between two conductors nearby. The worst thing that anyone can do is either ignore the situation or to tell someone to go 'stuff it'. As populations grow and more folks have transmitters (yes, cellphones are nothing but a fancy HT that automatically connects to the telephone company), these problems have also grown. An amateur license would be the last thing you want in your possession if you get caught on 11 meters with an amp. Ditto freebanding. The license doesn't protect you from everything; only faulty enforcement. The FCC can get involved in interference problems with the amateur community; they want the situation resolved. One can try filters (on transmitting or receiving equipment), changing antenna location/orientation, or even reducing power. If a station is found where it should not be, then eliminating the station is the easy (and appropriate) fix for the problem.

Just for what it is worth, when 9-11 hit, I lost my internet for a week. Finally, I found a new number for AT&T (then my ISP). It seems that Rochester, NY, was severely impacted (at least for AT&T internet service) from two buildings being destroyed over 300 miles ago. As far as dying, I just got a young fellow to get his ticket some weeks ago. The problem is that us old coots just keep ranting away :) (just kidding). I doubt that radio is going to 'blow away'. They've opened up MURS to anyone as well as FRS. There's room for us all.

Have a gooder & 73 from Rochester, NY
Jim

1. For the bizillianth time. HAM RADIO OPS ASKED FOR ENFORCEMENT. WE REJOICE
FOR THE SUPPORT SHOWN BY THE FCC'S WILLINGNESS TO ONCE AGAIN ENFORCE THE AMATEUR REGULATIONS. I don't know how to make than any plainer.

2. We WANT ENFORCEMENT, WE NEED ENFORCEMENT. NO ONE IN THE GREATER AMATEUR COMMUNITY IS SAD, OR WORRIED THAT WE MIGHT BE HIT-ONLY THOSE THAT BREAK THE LAW. YOU DO THE CRIME , DO THE TIME/FINE.
3. THE MORE THAT BREAK THE LAW, THE BETTER TO GET CAUGHT, DEAR!!! LOL!

4. TO REPEAT, THE POSITION OF "SPECIAL COUNSEL FOR AMATEUR ENFORCE-MENT' WAS CREATED AT THE BEHEST OF HAMS THEMSELVES.

5. THE CONCEPT OF LOCAL ENFORCEMENT IS BEGINNING TO KICK IN AS MORE AND MORE CITIES AND TOWNS FIND ABOUT THE US LAW.

6. ALL I CAN SAY IS, BRING IT ON, BRING IT ON. THE MORE HAMS THEY PUT ON THE RAINREPORT, THE BETTER IT WILL BE FOR ALL.

7. DIRECT QUOTE FROM R. HOLLINGSWORTH: "YOU CAN'T REGULATE STUPID".
STUPID IS GOING TO BE JUST THAT; S T U P I D.

...and that is how it is.

I simply asked what he intends to do with one. Who knows, what he wants to do may not even be possible or even practical. You shot your mouth off before the answer even comes in. Relax, and just flip off the computer then go and smoke another bowl of hash. Leave the replies to those whose brain isn't fried out by over use of drugs

I had it checked yesterday as a MOF. 120/74 at the dr's office. I am not worried about anything.
I am having more fun than ever. I shouted because the only way to get certain facts thru to some folks is to unscrew their scalp and pour it in. LOL! Honestly, I see no difference in the issue; if you are operating illegally, be he ham or cber, is is breaking the law--no matter HOW trivial it seems.
The rules are the rules. Period. I didn't make 'em; I just follow 'em. Ham breaking the rules. BUST "IM! Cber operating a splattering amp, or other illegal device. BUST 'IM. Seems simple to me, and no matter how many times this lame comparison is made, it doesn't embarrass or worry me at all.
Follow the rules, don't get hit. I have said it many times; you could run a galaxy, a hundred watts, stay within the 40 channels--betcha people would never notice. It is the ones that want to stretch the fabric that get cause trouble--for themselves as well as others affected by interference.. They bring it on themselves.

Hello, guys!

On the BP, I'm usually 120/80. The last trip it was 110/70 - I figure there is too much blood in my alcohol system so I've purchased a couple of cases and getting the pressure back up :) LOL

Hiya John wow what a blast from the past. Living proof the anti-illegal CB movement goes back a LONG way in this NG, and it will NEVER leave! LOL.

Hopefully soon here I will be creating a mailing list for those few legal CB operators to participate in. This list will exclude those who wish to operate illegally.

Information will be posted as soon as I get the software configured...

Ah, fond memories of the military :) I'll never forget the typhoon that hit Saipan. Took out the Coast Guard tower. The hams were trying to reach Guam. Too bad all the military in the receiver site on Guam didn't understand that all knobs to the right would overload their local oscillator and they kept saying the station was garbled. Oh well, fortunately I was in the ham shack at KG6AAY and we established communications - and received orders to pass all traffic to ComNavMar directly. I also remember the time at sea when we approaching the Philippine Islands and got too close for the higher frequencies (skip zone) and the lower HF didn't provide sufficient signals. I asked the chief about LF. He said it wouldn't work, but, as a learning experience I could try. Yep, solid signals on LF and the encrypted broadcast was back up in five minutes. Yes, nothing like military experience ;)

Power will not be a do-all, end-all on any UHF frequencies. A high tower will do more. The amateurs make use of repeaters (which are located on a tower, often atop a mountain or high hill). High power on a low antenna will only make your signals heard quite a bit farther away; you won't be able to receive replies.

Most of my experience involves being driven or flown out to an OP or CP to fix a bad radio on the net, only to get there and find that they either had the thing turned off, the volume turned down, the battery not installed, the antenna not connected, or set to the wrong freq. I even found a butterbar trying to work a radio with a handset that wasn't plugged in. (Later he almost blew us up during cold-weather training in Minnesota when he tried to keep the fire going by dripping gasoline on it from a 5-gal jerry can hanging upside-down above the fire. There was a pillar of flames of Biblical proportions, and I never saw an officer move so fast in my life!) But I did get to play with a couple Soviet radios allegedly abandoned by the Druze after we shelled the civilians in the hills. They worked pretty good, even held up to the three-foot drop test. I was even going to bring one of them home, but Major Xxxxx at the embassy wanted to keep them -- fine thanks I get for fixing his satellite link on the roof after getting knocked out by a dud mortar round! I should drop him an email and see if he still has them....

well not exactly true jimbo.....ah......if cops stop you about this stuff you can show them a license and that is all there is to it and that little caveat, was written into the law so that hammies wouldn't get nabbed courtesy of their own little law. now where you go from there , that is another story but to defeat this law and the local fuz harrassment, all you need is a license issued by the us government and you cannot be charged under this law at this local level.., plain and simple.....now then, i guess they could turn the matter over the fcc, which should be in charge of such matters anyways but what the hey......is this not correct????

Well, I do have my General Radiotelephone License (used to have the 1st phone and 2nd telegraph but let 'em expire) ... and that would do me no good in the situation. As we all know, the FCC is under funded (for enforcement; Congress just wants them to issue all kinds of green lights for the big corporations) so they have simply let local governments take over enforcement of unlicensed stations. We can argue all over the place, but the unfortunate fact is that big government is for big business, not individuals. I doubt they could care much less about us little folks. I notice that Xerox is paying most of the freight for the top management that used to be in charge of Xerox for misrepresenting net earnings. Must be nice to be a billionaire :)

i beg to differ jimbo .....i think it is a dying service. i mean really jim..i say it is a dying service and you say you got one guy.....one guy to do something.....please....that is just one guy.....and no offense but a lot of you guys have yourselves to blame for this.... i have met many hams and some are nice and some are not .....but the prevailing attitude i got when talking to them , is that i had to do things their way, i had to toe the line according to what they thought, i didn't know anything, and God forbid, don't tell them you operate on 11 meters.....never mentioning the fact that a lot of them are from this service.....let us face facts here jim.....some of us like it just where we are.....on 11 meters.....i myself like it just fine.....i cannot tell you why, but i do.....and always have.....i feel no urge to shall we say 'upgrade', if you will.....it is like i have said before.....you sign on the dotted line with uncle and you sign away your fifth ammendment rights.....and that is the way it is.....when they bust a cber, they may fine him,.....they may take away his stuff, ( which incidentally, they have to return by the way).....but when they bust a ham.....there is the preconceived notion on the government's part, via that damn ham license that you know damn well what you are doing and that you should have known better and so they can throw the book at you because of laws and rules they themselves made up to edify themselves and to help justify their governmental jobs and their budgets....but for cbers, courtesy of our freedoms, we can plead ignorance and that is suffice.....for me,.....that is ok.....

Are you going to get a ticket to show the fuzz, or are you going to just flip the bird to the fuzz? It is a real simple test. You don't even have to use it, although 2 meters is quiet in comparison to CB.

There are many out there to chat with, and they can be understood with FM clarity!

The problem is all the "ME" folks. They don't care about "YOU".

If you ask them to turn it down because you can't hear who you're talking to on your channel, they crank it up!. I used to blast those bastards with 800+ watts of sideband garbage. I would even ask nicely. They would call me "honky" give me the white/black BS that's nonexistent; except in their minds. They should be busted, charged with inciting a racial incident.

Now, I just turn it off.

Ah, forget the Plubium shields; I've gone QRO on 440. I put a 12 volt supply to the thing if I need it in the computer room and am up to a tremendous 5 watts. I only run around 3.5 watts on the alkalines, but that is sufficient for chatting through the Toronto repeater (no IRLP) :)

Thanks, Scott ..

As I said, however, there is room for all. Not all amateurs are the same and neither are all CBers. Until you've met decent guys (and gals!) on the other side of the fence, it is easy to draw conclusions. Speaking of gals - the only thing that bothers me is that there are so few YLs in amateur radio. That does make it a tougher sell. Then again, if you have a bunch of YLs at a party, who needs radio (ham or cb) anyways? :)

73 from Rochester, NY

ps - still looking over your antenna. Hoping I can keep my job! Thanks for the e-mail. Would you take 6 aa alkalines in trade? LOL ....

At CompuUSA, and maybe its sister store CoZone as well. Columbia Battery Charging System, SKU #301822, includes 4 AA and 4 AAA cells. $14.99 minus $2 instant saving, followed by a $13 rebate. The brand name on the cells is "Fullymax," and I suppose it's all made in China. I know the same item was free after the rebate two weeks ago too, so this seems to be an ongoing affair. The prices in this flyer are good from Sunday 6-8-03 through Saturday 6-14-03.

The last line explains to any intelligent person how you bring it on yourself, Jerry. Can't you just post the information and not snikker?

You show your immaturity every time you do that!

When it's a licensed ham, I don't see you laughing about it, no matter whether you asked for enforcement or not.

"Made in China" is a WARNING LABEL.

Example:

I purchased a Radio Shack battery charger (M in C of course) and despite using the proper type batteries that were recommended by the manufacturer it smoked one day after just 3 months of casual use. Thank glub
I was home and smelled it burning otherwise it may have burned down the house. Since then if it says "Made in China" and plugs into the wall socket, it does not get purchased by this household.

Radio Shack (18yo kid behind the counter) offered me a replacement. I said no.
They really thought I'd bring another "timebomb" into the house after the first trial run "fire drill"....

jimbo why get misty eyed about the akc folks???? they are here for one purpose......to tie up bandwidth, argue incessantly, and do all the things they cannot do elsewhere......so they do it here......i guess it makes them feel better.........and i will say this.........cb radio has been about power and who has it and who wants it, since the dawn of cb radio......and if anyone disagrees with that, they have not been in it long or they are dreaming perhaps. jim you don't ask for a break......you just take it....that is the way it is........i sir, did not invent these rules..........they have been inculcated in cb since 1957......the only difference between the 'day' and now is the internet and the explosion of knowledge and info....nowadays a newbie can do some research, get pumped up and do the deal......twenty years ago no one would help you, even if you asked.......it was a closed world.....those that had power and those that did not and it took a long time to get into the 'in' crowd....because the ones that had it , did not want to share it or have to compete with someone trying to get their station 10-8....that is the way it was.......now, all you have to do is be on the internet and you can find many people that will sell you a linear...........oh how i wish i knew 20 years ago what i know now........i would have squashed a few more ducks and probably had my windows shot out in my house, but such is the way of the rf warrier.......no doubt about it.........you have to fade the heat......

That isn't going to work. More power may net you longer transmit distance, but it won't help receive. On UHF you either need a high antenna, or use a repeater (as in amateur radio - or a cell phone tower - which is usually high and one can use a cell phone much farther than you might believe). The other option is to switch to SSB or some other mode which is good for weak signal use and I rather doubt that this is what he has in mind. :)

73 from Rochester, NY
Jim
ps - even a 36 inch antenna on an HT like I use will not net you much more than 5 or 6 miles to a similar HT. You need height. To figure your communications range, take the height of the antenna in feet (usually about 6 feet for an HT), double that (um ... twelve?). Now take the square root of that (well, say 3.5 miles - the antenna is over 36 inches high), and that is the range to your radio horizon. As long as your radio horizon touches or intersects someone else's radio horizon, you can communicate. That equates (in my case) to a maximum of 7 miles over flat ground. Yes, you can add power, but that won't help your receive. In the case of a 40 foot tower, you will have a radio horizon of roughly 9 miles. You will have a range to a similar station of 18 miles. If you are lucky and live on top of a 2400 foot 'hill' like my former neighbor does, you'll have a 70 mile line of sight to radio horizon. I've worked a repeater in Pennsylvania from here since I was atop a 22 story building on top of a hill and the repeater was located high. I was only running 3.5 watts. You'll need another station running an amp to make any difference in the equations (you start running 'scatter')

The FCC is giving the amateur service additional frequencies at 5 Mhz now, so the service is dying, yea right, you better take another look.

Differ all you want, the service is not dying, even though for some strange reason you would like to think so.

If you mean they might expect you to obey the regulations if you were to get you ham ticket, yea, you would be expected to do things that way. That is probably your problem with ham radio, you want to get on the air and do anything you damn well please without any regard to rules, so 11 meters is just fine for you and ham radio isn't.

Let's see. Messing with radios, that is a "life". Building antennas of all kinds, that's a "life".
Flying light aircraft with friends, that's a life. Serving as an aircraft crewmember on live search and rescue missions, that's a "life". Building wood projects with my Shopsmith (and other tools), that's a "life". All in all, I'd say it IS a life.

I use NiMh now. Big Lots had a Panasonic charger with 4 AA 1950 mAh for $9.99.

Energizer 4 pack AA 1850 mAh are $10.74 at Wal*Mart. No charger.

And there is this, just posted elsewhere on this group:
"At CompuUSA, and maybe its sister store CoZone as well. Columbia Battery Charging System, SKU #301822, includes 4 AA and 4 AAA cells.
$14.99 minus $2 instant saving, followed by a $13 rebate. The brand name on the cells is "Fullymax," and I suppose it's all made in China.
I know the same item was free after the rebate two weeks ago too, so this seems to be an ongoing affair. The prices in this flyer are good from Sunday 6-8-03 through Saturday 6-14-03."

I might go get me 2 sets. I can charge them in the Panasonic charger.
I can toss the "timebomb", or give them to someone to sweeten a deal...

Standing on a the roof of a six story building got me 7 miles from a stock Cobra FRS radio with dead batteries. Now it's time for a 19-345 simplex repeater up there.

I love those Energizers I bought. You may want to get a high capacity

It doesn't leave me all warm and fuzzy either. I always check the box when looking a product over to see where it is from. If nothing else, you could buy the charger, leave it in the box, and use the cells only. At least the price is right.

Best wishes.

no mater. more ican if you want it. blutarsky will tell every person the secret of ground efectivenes and you will listen if you will do it. the best is an iron bedf large size with spring and all bury this in the ground feet deep and cable wire to heavythick as ground strab. bolt to radio. caseing. if you have animls or chickens better let them urintate on the groiund where the biury is loacted. or salt or lard scrape from the pot. this will make perfect ground. wavelnght is no mater. mother of the ground? here is anther way. you need seperete chassys from an old radio take a one that dpoes not wpork. and put it outside where the base of the antena and cable it to the ground cable of the antena. now you have an efective ground at the antena. itself. blutarsky will eat from kotex of protsitutes if he is prove worng.

The pack was made with Panasonic 1950 mAh NiMh batteries. It was a

No reason for that at all. 40m has always been a "shared" band, with broadcasters using part(s) of the band in other parts of the world.

It's too bad more licensed hams don't take "elmering" more seriously.
And yes, I'm thinking of specific, well-known trolls right here in this newsgroup. Their goal in life seems to be to discourage CBers from taking the "simple 35 question test" and joining the ranks of amateur radio.

internet broadcasting is radio.

WOW! That goes way back!!! I am still here, yet, much more quiet these days. I had a campaign here that made me one of the more disliked people here. I wrote a report "The Inbred CB Operator report" and even posted it to a website. I think I even have it somewhere..... Hwoever, if my old iwaynet.net address can be dredged from the archives, that can too. I fought a (losing) battle against illegal operators.

I have since adopted an attitude of "live and let live" however, and for the most part only say nice, inoffensive things now.

Thanks for bringing up memories :)

What's the problem with this? 8 pill amps can be driven with more than 350

I wouldn't worry about that. UHF isn't going to travel too far, even with a megawatt. You would need a pretty tall antenna to extend UHF range. The cost and amount of work to get an FRS unit to doo al that would be a waste of time and money.

43.75 watts per pill? That's 36% of the output of a 2SC2879 @ 14 volts.

That's not in the linear portion of the curve. Gotta' sound like sh!t.

Hey "George" and "Aaron", you could learn something from this quote by John;

"I pretty much have decided that if I don't like what I hear on the radio, I turn it off. I have too much to concern myself now, than getting stressed out over radio."

I've done it myself. The click that relieves.

That's why we only buy solder and wire from Radio Shack, i.e. a few years back I picked up a mico cassette unit from them. Ten days latter it smoked! I took it back in and was told "we will not replace that unit, we will send it in for repair" One month later they called me to pick it up. Three weeks after that it smoked again, and again I took it back. That was Feb 26 2001 I'm still waiting for the return of the unit.

That would be sideband or amateur radio.

The bowl is BS. Bunch of Splatterers. I can hear those bastards on 39. Don't they know they could tromp someone better if ALL their RF was actually on 27.025? I used to nuke some of them with a two pill!!! They couldn't understand why whitey could take out their 8 pill with 2 pills.

now thats pure bullshit at its best. if you had a radio with any type of rejection you wouldnt have that problem. i'd gladly put alot of money that you couldnt be head much less take people out on 27.025, a 8 pill is VERY small time on channel 6. scott your quickly falling by the wayside since youve gone the 2 meters route. next youll be preaching to us all to throw away the amps. good thing for google incase you ever get too righteous on us.

You cannot remove stuff that's on your frequency.

Are you going to do what Fred H. did to Dan C. to me?

How do we know that you're not trolling under different nyms?

Do you think I'll bother to get a google account to spam and harass the NG?
Or load an AOL trial disk on a spare computer to spam and harass the NG?

You must have me confused with somebody else. I've got better things to do.

I didn't. I got my HS diploma, and a degree from the School of Hard Knocks.

My English teacher did a real good job of pushing spelling and grammar on us. We need more like him. I'm not perfect, but better then most.

Batteries plus will weld your cells together.
If you buy the cells from them, they will weld them for free.

Soldering to nicad/nimh cells damages them by overheating and melting the insulation.

i regularly monitor channels 36-40 during high times of dx just as i do other parts of 11 meters. the only time i have troubles like you described is when running radios like 2950's, galaxies, and others that are prone to get bleedover worse than they should. if i run the ft840, the 2510, or the grant it just doesnt happen. the skip signals are just as strong down here as they are up there so our locations shouldnt have much to do with it.

not when the skips rolling

I'm been ripped off too. This guy wanted to swap a DX-394 shortwave receiver and I sent him a Uniden 10 meter radio in trade. After about a month I was getting concerned and he replied that all shipping is slow coming in from Canada. Well its been two months now. No emails are being answered and I've since shipped several items to different countries with no problems. BEWARE of DAVE MONROE of Keene, Ontario!!!!!

Please can anyone tell me what the crystal frequency is for the reference oscillator in a Realistic trc-450. I think it is 11.285 but the xtal is gone and was replaced with a crystal that does the 10 meter ham band. I would like to put it back in the cb band for a friend of mine. Please email me at rmiddleton@arn.net. Thanks for your help.

I doubt it would do much good anyway. There is no way to directly connect an amplifier to a FRS radio. Second at UHF height is a much more important factor than power. I have a 100 watt amp for my 706MKIIG I haven't even gotten around to installing in my mobile because the advantage in the higher power, 100 watts vs. 20 watts, doesn't look like a big pay off.

At UHF it will be more like a "fish-bowl".

That's the exact same way the big time Internet hackers and pirate software sites do it. Sometime they don't even wait to get shut down. They just keep moving the site around like a big shell game.

it will make the difference between you hitting the machine with noise in your signal or full quieting while your in fringe areas. i'd leave it off though, the less people hear of lelnad the better.

Those people use a lot of batteries for the digicams.

There you will find that nicads are passe, and the ones to buy are Nickel Metal Hydride [NiMH].

Good thought on elmering; I'd have to disagree on the irlp and echo link. A friend of mine wanted to get in touch with me and when he saw I wasn't on the internet (Instant Messenger), he connected to the WB2KAO repeater here in Rochester. Yep, the HT was listening and I heard the call in the other room. This enabled us to communicate without having to dial me from British Columbia. It was an rf link on one end and served its' purpose very well indeed. :)

> Where do you think the batteries were made? Mine say "Made in China"...

If I may step in for a moment here.

My company runs two manufacturing plants. One in Vancouver BC, the other in mainland china.
Both plants operate at 6 sigma quality, which is somewhat better than Motorola. We produce all labor-significant products in China.

Anything that involves a lot of manual operations is going to be less expensive to produce in a country where manual labor is paid dollars a day, instead of in the good ole USA where it's 12-30 dollars an hour.. When your goods are sitting on the shelf, that "made in the USA" sticker won't save you from bankruptcy when an identical product made in China is sitting on the shelf at 2/3 the price.

Sure you can buy crap from china. And Japan, and the USA, and any other country you care to mention. You can also get superb quality in the same places. Just not from the same companies.

The fact of the matter is that if my competition can make goods of acceptable quality with lower priced labour than I can, I need to get about doing it that way as well, or close up shop.

Whatever you might think of their politics, the Chinese people are by and large, just like you and me. Trading with them also exposes them to the rest of the world, and plants the seeds of change.
Think not? What happened to feudal Japan? Anyone remember the Soviet Union? Racist South Africa? It's not going to happen overnight, but it happens.

Taiwan is a much nicer place to be today, than when I started going over there in the '80s. Air pollution was staggering. My apartment was literally a stone's throw from Chen Ching Lake in Kaohsiung, but only on Sundays could I SEE the lake. I could always hear the "plop" though. :)

Over the last 20 years, their government is much less of a military dictatorship, and much more of a democracy. Their air pollution is much better (though still a ways to go). And the prople are, by and large, just like you and me.

The "Inbred Radio" Information Report

This file is intended to identify and explain certain terms/behavior patterns used by the "Inbred Radio Operator".While mostly in jest, this text covers much of the aspects of radio that turn many people off.

DEFINITION: "Inbred Radio Operator": (n) An individual who operates a radio transmitter in a manner which violates regulations,and behaves in an uncivilized manner, without regard to his/her fellow radio operators.

HISTORY OF THE TERM: An Inbred is the result of procreation within one's immediate family. Generally such persons exhibit genetic defects. Reduced intelligence is one of these defects. Many redneck types stereotypically are thought to be the product of inbreeding. As a lot of, but not _all_ Cb operators, are of the redneck type, the term "Inbred Operator" was selected. Notice the above definition... The term does NOT indicate such an operator _actually is_ a product of inbreeding.

THE INBRED CB OPERATOR:

All of you who have used CB radio for any length of time have heard some joker with a radio that sounds like something out of a horror show. A prominent echo sound to his voice, a series of tones after and sometimes before he talks, a very distorted sound to his voice, and other irritating characteristics. Usually, the individual in question also laces his words with profanity, and can be heard for several channels, other than the actual one he is transmitting on. This is the "Inbred CB Operator".

These individuals typically in the real world are underpriveleged, undereducated, and blame everyone but himself for the sorry lot in life they have. They will frequently abuse other CB operators, and will, often, use channel 19 as a "soapbox" to explain the evils of the world, and to harass the hard-working, underpaid, members of the Professional Truck Driving community. You see, drivers have jobs. Oftentimes the Inbred CB operator, heretoafter known as an IO for brevity has no job, or at the most a simple, low paid job. The IO must consider himself superior to all others, not of his low social class, in order to gain some self-pride.

An IO will purchase several hundred dollars worth of equipment, simply to be the "biggest, baddest, and most irritating."

INBRED CB OPERATOR EQUIPMENT

The Inbred Radio Operator Uses the Following Gear (Junk) to perform his evil deeds:

"Peaked and Tuned Radio": A radio which has been adjusted to the maximum (Inbred Radio) power output and modulation limits the circuitry is capable of handling. Many times, this will result in serious overmodulation, and spurious emissions.

"Roger Beep": A tone, or series of tones used at the end of a transmission. Supposedly used to indicate an operator is done talking. (Inbreds cannot tell when a carrier drops) I can only regard such a devices as just another one of the devices an Inbred uses to cause irritation.

"Pinger": A tone emitted when an operator keys up. Good for when an operator keys up. Used for nuisance value only.

"Power Mike": A pre-amplified microphone. Used to ensure over-(Inbred over- modulation. 95% of all users of these microphones modulation aid) do not know how to adjust them properly, thus resulting in overmodulation, and _extreme_background noise.

"External RF Amp": Also known as the "Inbred Bleedover Generator" (TM)
a device used to increase the RF output of a radio.
These devices are referred to incorrectly as "linears", when typically they do NOT employ linear amplification. Generally they will cause bleedover to several adjacent channels, while doing little to nothing in regards to increasing transmit range.

"Echo": A device used to cause an echo effect on the operator's voice. Used in many cases to disguise the voice of the operator. Thought to help preserve anonymity while engaging in inbreeding.

"Noise Toys": digitally recorded sound effects installed in the radio, microphone, or external "toy box". Used strictly for annoying others. The "toy" which plays the sounds of a woman having an orgasm is thought to be that of a sister of an Inbred Radio Operator thus advertising the joys of inbreeding.

"Chaos Voice Chip": Used to take the operator's voice and electronically modify it. The user's voice is disguised, so he can cause chaos on the CB band without being identified. The two known users of such a device in my area with such a device use the unimaginative handle "Chaos".

INBRED RADIO OPERATOR HABITS

The Inbred Radio Operator has a great number of disgusting habits to aid in his quest to destroy the CB band and otherwise be an idiot. Some of the more popular follow:

Excessive Profanity: An IO will be easily identified by his linguistic skills. Liberal sprinklings of colorful language will fill his transmissions.

Accents: An IO will adopt a "hillbilly" accent at any time he picks up a microphone. The IO will use this accent even if his normal voice does not have this accent.

"CB Lingo": The IO will use such language to an excess. The IO does not realize Plain English can be used on CB, and must sound like "Joe CB".. Some common terms follow, but by _no means_ are they all-inclusive.

"No Doubt About it": used at all times for no reason. Some IOs will key up, say "No doubt about it", then be silent. I wonder if he is thinking about the last bed- room session with his sister.... "No doubt about it... she was good!"

"Breaker" Used incorrectly. Typically an IO will call "breaker" repeatedly until someone tells him to "go ahead". After that, they will then call the person they wish to contact. NOTE: the use of the word "Break" only should be used to interrupt a conversation in progress. It is unnecessary to break a clear channel.

"Walking the Dog": Used excessively to indicate how powerful their station is.

"Smacking":Stations will be in a conversation and the IO will key up with his supposedly powerful transmitter, and utter the words "Smack" or other words, to attempt to "step on" one or more of the parties involved in the conversation.

"Keying:" Also known as "walking on" someone. Inbred operators will drop a carrier on the air in order to prevent others from using the channel.

"Skip Shooting": Also known as the "Inbred Long-Distance Call"(tm) Due to characteristics of 27 Mhz, the IO will attempt to contact persons outside of the local area. Most times these contacts will be out of state. This interferes with local communications, which CB was designed for.

Deliberate Harassment:

The inbred operator will oftentimes tune to channel 19 in order to harass truck drivers. The drivers have jobs, and the IO is jealous. An Inbred Operator generally will be unemployed, or have some dead-end job.

Inbred Radio Operators will also transmit music for no reason. They will whistle excessively. Belching, farting, or simulations of such activities are also popular among the IO crowd.

The Inbred Operator has a poor self-image. People in the real world shun and disrespect the IO. The IO may be an alcoholic and/or drug user. The IO will therefore hide behind the microphone and try to feel "big and bad", by harassing others, safely behind the microphone.

THE "INBRED RADIO MECHANIC"

Naturally, Inbred Operators need someone to create the "Inbred Radio". This is where the "Inbred Radio Mechanic" comes into play. The IRM uses a wattmeter, modulation meter, and _maybe_ a frequency counter. That is about all the equipment the IRM will use to commit his butchery.

The IRM will either clip the modulation limiter, or turn the adjusting pot all the way up to the max, depending on the radio. Also the pot that adjusts RF power output will be maxed. The process will then be complete. No oscilloscope or spectrum analyzers used by these guys. A clean, pure signal is not required for an Inbred Radio.

Many Inbred Radios will actually modulate backwards! The IRM had adjusted the radio on his bench, without realizing the owner will be operating the radio under his own conditions. The Inbred operator will hook up all his little goodies and "walk the dog". A CB radio has the capability to put out more power and modulation than it came out of the factory with.

There is a reason for this. Power output and modulation will occasionally go above the factory settings. This is the nature of radio. Tolerances of components are taking this into consideration. When a radio is cranked up all the way, the radio has no way of allowing for these variables. The radio will therefore back off, in order to protect itself. Nonetheless, the life of an Inbred Radio will be shorter than one kept at legal specifications.

NOTE: I do not oppose _all_ adjustments. Many radios are undertuned at the factory. If you need to have your radio cranked up some, do it sensibly. Do not crank the power output up to the maximum you can get it. Allow for peaks. Keep modulation levels about 95%, set to YOUR operating practices. Each person "plays radio" with a different style. IF you have no choice in adjusting the modulation.... just clip the limiter and deal with it... well here is a solution. IF your radio has a mike gain control, just turn it until you get 100% mod.Then KEEP it set there. I never have the mike gain on my Uniden PC-76 XL over 3 quarters open. If you have no mike gain, use a power microphone, and set it to that level.

FINAL WORDS ON CB

I hope this text has given you an insight on the dregs of society who plague our airwaves today. Citizen's band radio can be an inexpensive, reliable method of communication if all users observe common sense and common courtesy. Regrettably, the degenerates described above are all too common on the radio today. Their presence degrades the quality of life for everyone.

I challenge ALL CB operators to help rid the airwaves of such idiots. Refuse to talk to anyone who exhibits such abovementioned behavior. Start channels of your own with specific policies excluding those who use echo, toys, beeps, amplifiers, etc. Start a "straight radio" channel in your area.

Do not give breaks to Inbred Operators. Remember, the key to help clean up the airwaves, or irritants in general: You ignore a pest, they go away.

If you are a "clean" CB operator in the Columbus, OH area, perhaps we can get the ball going on a "clean" channel. Drop me a line.

THE "INBRED FAMILY RADIO SERVICE OPERATOR"

This new service has recently been created by the FCC. The Frequency band authorized will surely eliminate long-distance communications. The handheld equipment with integral antennas will discourage many Inbred Operators from operating there. The 500 milliwatt ERP limits will also turn the band's appeal off to many Inbred Operators.

NONETHELESS... this service will be offered to the General Public, is license free, and equipment will be readily available. There will surely be someone out there that will attempt to disrupt communications. The Use of selective calling systems, as well as subaudible tone squelch systems will help keep communications with "outsiders" to a minimum.... but not all equipment will be equipped with such circuits. FCC ruling made such devices optional.

Additionally, the General Mobile Radio Service has been available for years. I have yet to see the Inbred Operators working on this band. I consider the nature of 27 Mhz and AM to be a leading attraction to the IO. FM, as well as the lack of "skip conditions" will deter the IO.

DISTRIBUTION RULES AND DISCLAIMERS:

Information you would like to see in future editions of this report should be addressed to me. Information will be regularly updated and/or corrected.

FOR THE "POLITICALLY CORRECT SHEEP": The symbol (tm) does not in any way indicate an official copyright or trademark. This IS A JOKE. Additionally, this text is intended to offend persons who behave improperly on Cb radio, as well as those who support them. If you are offended... TOUGH SHIT.

Frank, even though you are more moody than most menopausal women, I do like to read what you write. Most times, you do have valid arguments to back up what you post. I'm not bashing you, simply stating an observation.

4408. Review: Amateur Radio Companion 3rd Edition

Review: Amateur Radio Companion 3rd Edition

The 3rd edition of the Amateur Radio Companion marks a "coming of age" of this product. Not only does it have the favourite materials from the previous editions, it has expanded on those and more!

"What is it?" you ask? It has to be the most complete reference created for electronics and radio enthusiasts that I have seen.

It is not only a supportive educational product, but has enough information packed into it that you can dispense with many of the heavy handbooks, textbooks and teaching aids which take up your valuable shelf space. With over 500MB and 600 pages written in an easy-to-read style and internet links to help you along the way, it is a gem!

There is so much material on the CD that pages could be written just to cover it all, so I will just summarize.

There is a huge amount of reference material - coaxial cable tables, copper wire sizes, semiconductor datasheets, electronics component data and commonly used formulas, as well as connectors, plugs and sockets and many diagrams for easy identification.

A huge amount of software for electronics and radio enthusiasts - circuit design, antennas, callsign lookup, radio modifications, morse code and packet radio - and both MS-DOS / Windows and Linux are supported.

The entire website of Ron Bertrand's popular Radio and Electronics School (www.radioelectronicschool.com) - all course readings and software, in fact the entire site so you can browse the CD as if you were on the Internet and at the site.

On top of all this there is a "from the ground up" look at other areas of interest in radio both old and new: Slow scan TV (SSTV) and ATV (fast scan), Internet Radio Linking (IRLP and EchoLink), a large and impressive section on antennas and antenna design, and a catalog of world-wide frequency allocations, repeater and beacon lists and more.

The CD is definitely not "bland". The interface is HTML driven which means you browse the CD as if you were on the Internet, and if you have an Internet connection there are links off the CD to other sites of interest to all users.

It comes packaged in a slimline case which is both compact and sturdy - ideal to take with you when travelling. It is a marvellous effort, and at only $20 plus postage - don't let the price fool you into thinking it will be anything but high quality - it is exceptional value-for-money.

To cap it all off, it is created and produced in Australia by someone who knows something of what they are talking about in the shape of Michael Todd VK6JMA. If you would like to find out more, visit the ARC website at www.arcompanion.com or email Michael at toddcomp@bigpond.com and decide for yourself if this product is for you.

Pass this review on to your friends and acquaintances, in fact anyone who has an interest in radio or electronics. And don't forget to get a copy yourself - you won't regret it!

Just to help out the private (non-Ebay) sales, I would recommend when you do a trade like this, to specify EXPEDITED parcel post shipping from the Canadian. It's only about a $1.00 more than standard parcel post and give you tracking ability (up to the border). You will know it's shipped, and the sender gets delivery confirmation off the web (www.canadapost.ca). Insurance is also available for $1.00 per CAN$100.00 in value.

I've been using it for all my Ebay auctions lately, and it gives the buyers some piece of mind.

I'm not affiliated with CanadaPost.......I just like this new service!

Your communication deficits are rendering you incompetent of correct interpretation. It's not about content, compooter guru Lelnad..it's about obeying the terms of service. Perhaps you shouldn't be so lazy and cheap, expecting something for nothing from a free service,,,,,spend some of that 140-plus grand a year you claimed you make and buy yourself accsess to an ISP that will allow you to do just what you want. This is something you clearly should have done prior to making such juvenile pages and violating an ISP's TOS. Crying about your own behavior and inability to obey rules set forth for the good of all after you're smacked by your own host is a tad hypocritical.

I rather like the attention and lengths you go out of your way for,,it solidifies your incompetence while illustrating you obsessive compulsiveness. Airing those posts from Dick has you beside yourself..thing is, devoting such resources to little 'ol me prove your impotence and anger. Your quip belows illustrates your failure at attempted malice.Face it , Lelnad, you're a three time loser.

>If Twirted wants to end his misery

LOL...is that what you think you have accomplished? Making 'ol twist "miserable?" Hehehe..you better take another swig of that cheap wine and begin reading the archives from the day we first exchanged pleasantries up to now. As I said to Frankie,,where are you now?
At least your impotence is manifesting through your ignorance.....first you claim it's humor, now you claim it's "misery" for me...as usual,,you are tripping over your hair lip and contradicting yourself...LOL.

Oh, and I don;t mind the page at all, Lelnad. It details the immense effort you place in it and illustrates the great lengths you go to defend it. What I enjoy are the TOS violations you loser lids continue to violate while preaching a false virtue of righteousness to others.

Between Frank and Geogre's swearing, and your crying and worrying, insultive name-calling, and failed attempts at creating something you feel is upsetting to anotherm your solution is quite obvious, but you're of a juvenile mindset and unable to grasp such simple equations. It's why I like having you to refer to,,,you;re a perfect example of what hammies say is detrimental to hammie radio...a lid.

Of course, couple your non-related cb radio posts with Geogre and Frankies, and we have a plethora of posts directed toward what none of you have been able to deal with, handle or comprehend from the day you were initiated: personal problems.
Such advice has been given over and over to the point of it being rendered invisible to those who really don't want to see it...those who don't want to be told what to do, but have this inane desire to tell others how to behave.
The natural conclusion is you, Frankie, and Geogre, have no desire to be reasonable nor on topic. Your loser status illustrates an agenda to salvage what ego you feel you have left....in turn, you losers attempt anything to reach such imagined goals..
Allowing my posts to turn you and Frankie into quivering children is just ludicrous, after all, I had no control here until you turned over all self-control of yourselves (you too , Frankie, and Geogre makes three) to me...thing is,,I wished no control over any of your lives,,you merely forced such control upon me,,,,,it happens with many teacher-student relationships, As your mind grows and maturity occurs, such strong emotions will wane with your maturity level.

Good morning! My, but I ruled your weekend yet again in my absentia....:
)
Single-handedly, you have made me larger than life in your tiny mind.
Through your troubled dilemmas and mental fixations that control you, you have annointed me to 'star' status, something you wanted for yourself all your insignificant life. All this you culled from a lowly insignificant cber.
Bobbing and weaving, feigning and retreating, working out stats and percentages of my posts.....swimming in google at my whim..... you were relegated to inventing new words and phrases that do not exist in order to soothe your deflated ego when your ignorance prevented success at adeptly conveying your feelings into English....,a trait illustrating magnificently how deep your communication deficit runs.

I have become such an important factor in your life that I make certain
I get plenty of exercise and take vitamins. Regular doctor visits are the norm now just so you wouldn't be left alone should something happen to my health.

How is that tattoo "propetty of twist" across your forehead holding?
Careful,,,,there exist copyright laws (ahahahahhahahhahahah).

You may take a page from the children;s book, since that is the mindset and company you prefer these days. You can have a tongu spike done like all the kids are having done today/
It could merely say" Twist" in the form of a donkey's ass and it would forever be uppon your lower hairlip.

You may wish to wera an armband "Twist must leave the group", ..you can even get some bumperstickers made from the same place where we receieved the "I Vote and I DX" stickers. Yours could call for my ouster.
You may wish to consider radio and ttelevision ad,,scratch the radio,,,you know nothing of it.

Have you listened to the north wind in your area lately, Lelnad? Listen really hard and you can hear it whisper "Twisted"..you know the one.....the one that is still in rec.radio.cb, despite your many claims of having me tossed and your baby cryings from failed attempts at censorship. Now, continue to share your lidness with the rest of the good folks at the ARRL....that's one thing I like about the ARRL,,,,once alerted to trouble, they watch their members like the FBI. Twist on, brutha, "Nad!

Frank has allowed his word, much to his chagrin, to be his downfall. He forgets what he claims and in many cases has self-contradicted himself. His last snafu cocerning his locale was when he claimed a "local" was busted for radio interference, then when he was asked to show something other than his claim, he posted a link to an incident clear across the state near Seattle..when the location was pointed out to Frank as not being "local" to him, he immediately changed the subject matter and attacked with the usual name calling and his personal fondness...accused me of "nitpicking" and went on a rant how his "post" was proof of his claim and how I was just "looking" for a way out because I was "proved wrong"...ahahahahah!

Don't know why anyone would really care where Frank lived anyway..he can usually be found online at all times......there are even a few posts where he was using his call in his sig, but he only did it a few times and this was prior to the cbers kicking him over the cliff of insanity.............for some reason, paranoia of identity ranks extremely high with Frank. Take into consideration all his posts concerning his half efforts at finding info on internet strangers, and his obsession with identity becomes crystal clear......another whack job at best, but he's relatively harmless.

He also claimed he was still in the USMC, yet he has no recollection of Fire school.

Dick never had to repeat himself to those that suffer no communication deficit. We can comprehend information just fine the first time it is presented.
Odd you take issue with the man's word when he is dead, but you had nothing to say when he was alive concerning his facts.

Also, I snipped no link as there was none in the post of Dick's that I did post. Dick ignored Leland's off-topic rant and accusing him, of all people, of attacking Lelnad for a personal disageement...no,, we all know who has the personal problems on the half-brain.

Sure Lelnad was forged.,,,but nowhere did Dick claim it was I, despite your accusations and Lelnad's. Why would Lelnad expect anything less that what he dished out? Hypocrisy.

Allow me to place this in perspective,,,you are telling me I have no right accusing Lelnad of forging me or threatening me when I have an email from his isp claiming the offending user was terminated for violations of their service and he suddenly goes "poof", yet you accuse ME of doing the same, with much less "proof" as you so fondly refer.

I need accuse no one. With logic like Lelnad's and yours (N8 on the FCC bust list, but he didn;t do anything wrong) your ignorance precedes the both of you.

>and you usually do. But to claim that Dick

>"proved" your suspicions with nothing more

They weren't MY suspicions, but you have a hard time coming to terms with this,,,they were DICKS suspicions, and Lelnad attacking him on a personal note as he does everyone else in a sordid failed pathetic attempt at changing the subject was all the "proof" Dick, or anyone else needed. Like a predictable cockroach, theattempted deflection by Lid-Lelnad KC8LDO has always been to attack and attempt to discredit ANYONE who identified his behavior as compromised,,,Dick included,,this was a perfect example.

>Now why is this so hard for process you have demonstrated a remarkable and incurable ignorance for.......I base this, you understand, on your very own comments to undermind Thomas Paine's contributions to this country and that unique command you share concerning the English language in the most basic and raw form.

>Thomas Paine was an opportunistic limey that

You have a twisted way of interpreting history.

>Ironically, his concepts of freedom were so >book.

A requirement of an enlisted soldier can not be construed as "forced", lest all our military personnel are forced.

>Now WTF does any of that have to do with >you trying to ride the credibility of Dick >McCollum?

Nothing with Dick,,,it had to do with Paine's works and his anonymous papers and writings and the need for privacy when writing of subjects certain factions do not agree with, as such certain factions would attempt retribution as has been demonstrated in here aptly by the most recent attempts to censor and attack what you can't handle, comprehend or that of which you disagree with.

What is odd behavior (even for you) is you mentioning a single past post as attempted diversion, and you have been swimming in Twisted Google juice all weekend while I have been swimming in the Weeki Wachee. So, what exactly are the problems you suffer, besides the communication deficit, mild retardation, and anger?
Your exhibitions in lack of self-control speak of a plethora of problems,.....Everyone knows it is simply because you managed to come across one who refuses to bend to your demands and ideas of what is and isn't morally acceptable..... and that not only infuriates you, it frustrates you. You do not handle rejection nor impotence well. You should have been told "no" as a child. Everyone also knows that you lie. You have mentioned first that you were "done with me", yet continue to initiate threads and posts directed at me, sharing your lack of tolerance for all that is foreign to you. You claimed you "were leaving the ng", and that I somehow influenced Dick's opinion, (yet, I was nowhere on the forum), You then reversed yourself and claimed it was Dick that re-inforced my opinion.

You have, as Lelnad, unsuccessfully attempted to have me censored and tossed merely because I refuse to do as you demand AND, I mock your self-destruction well. You feel the world somehow revolves around you and when you lose face in a debate you have no choice but to misinterpret it as a personal attack upon your flawed character makeup. You are an emotionally unstable individual to allow an internet stranger such as myself, to affect you in such a dire manner that your posts are all devoted to "me". Self-esteem must be terrible thing to not possess.

FEDERAL LAW VS. HAM RADIO: THE CONFUSION OVER HIPPA

A new federal healthier law with the acronym HIPPA is affecting Amateur Radio. Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, takes a look at the recent implementation of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act and its impact on the hobby.

If you are a ham with a disability and are a member of a group any other organization that has knowlege of your problem, then listen up. In order to continue receiving most benefits from such a group you are now required under Federal law to fill out and return the new Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act privacy guidelines forms that you may have already recieved or will recieved from each group.

Its the Federal government that requires the paperwork, and signing it will allow groups that must disclose disability information in the course of routine business to continue to serve you. For hams with disabilities it means that groups like the Handi Hams can continue to provided direct assistance with license renewal or license changes, publish news of individual license upgrades, and even send a birthday greeting by the ham radio's National Traffic System.

What about individuals who do not sign the forms? They will still be able to receive some services offered by these groups, but limited to those which do not involve releasing information about their physical condition. However, in the case of the Handi Hams, a disabled ham could no longer be connected with the groups assistance community of other members and volunteers because of the new federal privacy regulations.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I’m Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, in Los Angeles.

INTERNATIONAL: 40 METER CHANGE LOOKS GOOD

ARRL Executive Vice President Dave Sumner, K1ZZ, says that prospects for a harmonized worldwide 40 meter ham band are starting to look good. Speaking at a recent Dayton Hamvention forum, Sumner says it may all hang on what the United States proposes for the upcoming World Radio Communications conference later this year:

Even if a large number of delegations come up with similar proposals, Sumner says that caution is still the by-word until all the voting has been done:

HAM SPECTRUM: 5 MHZ SPOT FREQUENCIES AVAILABLE MIDNIGHT JULY 3

LOOKING FOR SOMETHING NEW IN HAM RADIO? WELL, HERE'S NEWS JUST IN FROM THE FCC AND THE ARRL. I'M ROY NEAL, K6DUE, WITH A LATE BREAKING STORY THAT HAMS HAVE BEEN WAITING A LONG TIME TO HEAR. 60 METERS. 5 MEGAHERTZ …SOON WILL BE AVAILABLE WITH

5 CHANNELS FOR YOUR PLEASURE AND INVESTIGATION. A SECONDARY FIVE CHANNEL DOMESTIC HAM RADIO ALLOCATION WILL BECOME AVAILABLE STARTING AT MIDNIGHT, THURSDAY THE THIRD OF JULY.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT USERS ARE PRIMARY IN THE 5 MHZ BAND. AMATEURS GET FIVE CHANNELS, 2.8 KHZ WIDE, WITH CENTER FREQUENCIES OF 5332, 5348, 5368, 5373, AND 5405 KILOHERTZ.

GENERAL AND HIGHER CLASS LICENSE HOLDERS WILL BE PERMITTED TO OPERATE UPPER SIDEBAND PHONE, WITH A MAXIMUM OF 50 WATTS EFFECTIVE RADIATED POWER.

USERS ARE BEING ADVISED TO SET THEIR CARRIER FREQUENCY ONE AND A HALF KILOHERTZ LOWER THAN THE CHANNEL CENTER FREQUENCY. THE ARRL ALSO SUGGESTS RESTRICTING AUDIO BANDWIDTH TO 200 HERTZ ON THE LOW SIDE AND 2800 HERTZ ON THE HIGH END TO KEEP THE TOTAL BANDWIDTH WITHIN THE 2.8 KHZ IMPOSED BY THE FCC.

THE REPORT AND ORDER GRANTING THE NEW SPOT FREQUENCY ALLOCATION AT 5 MEGS WAS PUBLISHED IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER ON JUNE THIRD. LOOK FOR LOTS MORE ON THE SUBJECT IN THE NEAR FUTURE HERE ON THE AMATEUR RADIO NEWSLINE.

INTERNATIONAL - SOLOMON ISLANDS: LICENSING CONFUSION

Meantime, in the Southern Hemisphere, some questions and some possible answers regarding the confused state of ham radio licensing in the Solomon Islands. Q-News Graham Kemp, VK4BB, has the details:

Sam Voron, VK2BVS, spoke to QNEWS from an Internet kiosk at Dubai airport. Sam was en route to Somalia, but paused just long enough to answer a few rumors regarding the Solomon Island H44 prefix licenses.

According to Voron, there had been no way for people to get a license in the Solomons because there are no exams there. So in 2002 the H44 national radio regulatory body called Spectrum printed 21 novice licenses with the call signs chosen by students at a radio school. These are people took the Unrestricted level license class of ham radio training.

But Spectrum said that it first wanted to issue Novice licenses because it felt new operators should start with an entry level ticket before moving on to a full license. But Voron admits that at least two of these licenses may have been issued with Unrestricted privileges.

According to Voron, the Secretary of the H44 national ham society has now drawn up an Unrestricted exam. Students not happy being forced into the novice license when they spent 6 months studying for the Unrestricted will be able to take the exam. If they pass, they will go directly to the Unrestricted instead of the Novice class operating privileges.

In further news just in and unsubstianted as yet, the real exam is ready. Spectrum has directed the candidates to sit for it. The school and candidates are said to be dealying because they are frightened that it may be to hard.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I’m Graham Kemp, VK4BB, of Q-News, down-under, in Brisbane, Australia.

No matter when that first upgrade test is held, it appears as if a method is at least now in place for native born Solomon Islanders to take an Amateur Radio exam. (Q-News)

FCC: KILLS RULES FOR LIGHTING DEVICE EMISSION LIMITS AT 2400-2500 MHZ

Remember a few years back when hams became very worried about degradation to the 2 point 4 Gigahertz band? This, after the FCC adopted a First Report and Order that relaxed the emission limits for R F lighting devices.

That was on June 9th of 1999 and at that time the Commission deferred to a future date action on changes to the rules to permit such devices to operate from 2400 to 2500 MHZ.

Now, with no apparent remaining interest by the lighting industry to produce RF lighting devices in that spectrum, the FCC has decided to forego any further rule change. Well, at least for the moment it has.

The whole story is at http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-03-123A1.doc on the World Wide Web. (CGC)

RADIO LAW: FCC ACTS TO EASE MEDIA OWNERSHIP RESTRICTIONS

Federal regulators have acted to relax rules that restrict media ownership. The change will permit companies to buy more broadcast properties and own a newspaper as well as a radio or television station in the same city.

On Monday, June 2nd the Federal Communications Commission announced that it voted 3 to 2 to adopt a series of changes favored by media companies. It now says that a single company can now own TV stations that reach 45 percent of United States households instead of the previous 35 percent limit. The agency also eased rules governing local TV ownership so one media conglomerate can own two television stations in more markets and up to three stations in the largest markets like New York or Los Angeles.

More controversial was a decision to end an age-old ban on joint ownership of a newspapers and broadcast stations in the same city. The revised rule lifts all 'cross-ownership' restrictions in markets with nine or more TV stations. Smaller markets still face some limits and cross-ownership is still banned in city’s and towns with three or fewer television outlets.

And even these rule changes are expected to face court challenges. Some media companies already indicate wanting more wide spread deregulation. Meantime consumer advocates will be seeking to reverse the deregulatory trend in favor of more local control over the print and broadcast media.

Not approached in this latest round of broadcast deregulation was the subject of direct foreign ownership of U-S broadcast properties. Currently foreign entaties and governments are banned from such ownership. But over the years there has been intensive lobbying by foreign interest groups to do away with this ban which requires an act of Congress to lift. Most annylists say its not likely to happen in the near future. (Published news reports)

ENFORCEMENT: LOCAL CHARGES FILED AGAINST OHIO CB OPERATOR

Complaints from a group of neighbors experiencing interference on household appliances from phones and TV sets to baby monitors have resulted in a court case against a citizens band radio operator. Amateur Radio Newsline’s David Black, KB4KCH, takes a look at a most interesting case:

On the CB airwaves, he's said to go by the name Sugar Bear. James A Disbennet, of Lancaster, Ohio, faces first degree misdemeanor charges of operating a CB radio exceeding 4 watts. He also faces two counts of operating a CB radio without certification. The Lancaster Eagle Gazette says Disbennet was released on bond after answering a summons in Fairfield County Municipal Court May 20th.

The Lancaster City Council was the first such group in the U-S to pass an ordinance allowing the City to enforce rules set by the FCC governing the strength of CB radios. On April 10th, an assistant superintendent of the City's Electrical, Communications and Signals Department went on a transmitter hunt. The interfering signals were traced to Disbennet's home. The City then obtained a search warrant, with Lancaster police serving the warrant the following day. Officers seized four pieces of CB radio equipment worth more than a thousand dollars.

A trial date has yet to be set. If convicted, Disbennet could be hit with a 1,000 dollar fine and 180 days in jail.
For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm David Black, KB4KCH.

According to the law under which Disbennet was charged, the definition of CB radio "includes all private, two-way, short-distance voice communications service for personal or business activities of the general public. Citizens filing complaints must keep an accurate log of the interference for a minimum of four weeks and there has to be more than one complainant in order to file charges. The only exclusions to the law are for emergency communications services like police, fire and FCC licensed radio amateurs.

ENFORCEMENT: FCC WITHDRAWS LETTER IN ENHANCED SSB OPERATION

Remember a stir created on April 3rd the FCC sent advisory letters several hams who run enhanced or so-called high fidelity single sideband? The FCC told those operating the mode that the agency had received complaints from other radio amateurs alleging that the enhanced mode transmissions were using bandwidth wider than necessary. The FCC termed this as being contrary to good engineering practice.

One of those hams receiving such a notice was Anthony G. Latin, W4NSG, of Ocala Florida. Now, a month later the FCC has withdrawn its original letter to Latin, stating that it was issued to him in error. The regulatory agency also apologized to W4NSG for whatever inconvenience that letter may have caused him. No specific reason for the withdrawal of the letter was given. (FCC)

ENFORCEMENT: FCC ISSUES ANOTHER ENHANCED SSB WARNING

But its not over yet. This is because the FCC has issued another ham a similar warning regarding the use of enhanced SSB on the Amateur Service bands.

The May 12th letter went to Tyler Stampfli, KA0KA. Like those issued back in April, it tells the La Grange, North Carolina ham that use of enhanced Single Sideband emission with a bandwidth wider than necessary is contrary to good engineering practice. It also notes that no spectrum in the Amateur Service is designated specifically as “wideband audio” frequencies, either by Commission rule or in any informal band plans.

The FCC did not cite Stampfli. It did however request that he fully review the relevant Amateur Service rules and to make certain his station conforms to them. Also that he operate in the best interests of the Amateur Radio Service as a whole. (FCC)

ENFORCEMENT: BIG CELLULAR FINE

The FCC has issued Western Wireless Corporation and WWC Holdings two Notices of Apparent Liability to Monetary Forfeiture in the amount of $200,000 each. The companies are the licensee of Cellular Radio Station KNKN343 in North Dakota. The FCC says that the the companies are operating radio transmitting equipment from an unauthorized location resulting in the first fine.

The second $200,000 is the result of what the FCC says was Western Wireless for operating radio transmitting equipment from another unauthorized location. The two NAL’s wewre issued on May 5th and the companies were given the customary time to appeal.

HAM RADIO AND THE LAW: CA HAM FILES FOR COURT COSTS

Mark Abrams, WA6DPB, the ham who recently triumphed over the city of Rancho Palos Verdes California in an antenna zoning case is headed back to court. In an e-mail to Amateur Radio Newsline, Abrams says that his attorneys have recently completed our briefing in the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals on the issue of damages. Abrams says that he is now waiting for a court date which he expects will be around the end of August or early September. After the hearing, Abrams says that he expects to wait another 60 days for a written decision from the Court. If the Court decides in his favor he wins the right to have another trial on the amount of attorney's fees, court costs and damages. If he looses Abrams says that it will be unlikely that he will take the matter of reimbursement for his legal fees any further. (WA6DPB)

CHANGING OF THE GUARD: FRANK SCHWAB, W8OK, - S.K.

Some sad news to report. The changing of the guard in ham radio continues. This with word that Frank Schwab, W8OK, has passed away.

As we reported last week, Schwab, who helped to craft the Dayton Hamvention over a half century ago suffered a heart attack a few hours prior to this years event. At the time, the 77 year old Schwab was also fighting cancer and several other ailments.

While best known for his work in creating the Hamvention, W8OK was also a world-class D-X’er and heavily involved in public service activities. Services were held Monday June 2nd at St. Christopher's Church in Vandalia, Ohio. A page long tribute to Schwab appeared recently in the Dayton Daily News. (W8ILC)

TIME TO RETIRE: WISCONSIN SCHOOL CLUB GOING QRT

After over 25 years in operation, Andrew Martin, KB9ZLL, reports over qrz.com website that the Fond du Lac, Wisconsin High School's ham radio club is dissolving. This, due to the retirement of it's trustee Jeffry Hoeft, K9NC.

The club had its beginnings in the old high school building in 1972. Back then it consisted of a wire antenna and CW transciver. Today the group has operations on the high frequency bands as well as two meters and 440 Mhz. More important, the Fond du Lac club has been responcible for the licensing of nearly two dozen new hams over the years it has operated. (KB9ZKK, QRZ.COM)

NET NEWS: NEW ECHOLINK VHF CONFERENCE

Ron Pastterson, W6FM, reports the creation of a new conference on Echolink devoted to the discussion of all aspects of VHF and UHF weak signal operating. The name of the on-line gathering is VHF_TALK and it was created to assist in coordinating skeds, discussing band openings and anything else related to operations in the world above 50 Mhz.

For those who aren't familiar, Echolink is a voice over I P system available to licensed amateurs. For more information on it and the new conference take your web browser over to www.echolink.org. Ron adds that the conference will hopefully soon be avail over the world wide Internet Repeater linking Project as well. Information on IRLP is in cyberspace at www.irlp.net . (VHF Reflector)

ON THE WEB: AMATEUR REPEATER BUILDERS HOME PAGE GOES QRT

The Amateur Repeater Builders Home Page appears to have gone QRT and its owner is blaming the attitudes of some hams for its demise. In a posting to the website, its administrator says in part that due to an unfortunate series of events resulting from this groups actions the Amateur Repeater Builders Page page will no longer be maintained.

Whats involved appears to be a dispute over universal recognition and acceptance of the the Northern California Amateur Radio band plan and what the board administrator terms as intentional interference to coordinated 420 links with an ATV transmitter. He says that the FCC's lack of time and/or interest in addressing the issue has caused him to become thoroughly disgusted and that he is -- quote -- ‘Gone fishing!’

But all might not be lost. Kevin Custer, W3KKC, says that he plans to contact the Amateur Repeater Builders Home Page owner to try to obtain the rights to the website and host it himself. He says he will let everyone know what happens over the Yahoogroups based Repeater Owners remailer. (W3KKC, VHF Reflector)

THAT FINAL ITEM: THE OWLS ARE BACK

And finally this week, its time to get ready to T-Hunt down those ever elusive Burrowing Owls. And this year there’s another creature to look for -- bats. Heres Joe Moell, K0OV, with all the details:

For five years, ham operators and scanner listeners in western states have monitored VHF frequencies to help researchers in Saskatchewan and Washington state study the migratory behavior of Western Burrowing Owls, a species of concern. Now three more monitoring projects are beginning, and this time we need volunteers in south-central and southeastern states.

A biologist at the University of South Florida at Tampa (USF) is studying Florida Burrowing Owls. That's a slightly different subspecies from the Western Burrowing Owl. It is thought that their range is limited to Florida and the Keys, but there is one 40-year-old report of a sighting in North Carolina. Researchers have banded the legs of these birds in the past, but none of the banded owls have been recovered after leaving their Florida homes.

For the new study, some Florida Burrowing Owl chicks are being radio-tagged right now. Local researchers are tracking them as they leave their nests, learning to forage. In the summer, the young owls are expected to take off for parts unknown. USF wants volunteers throughout the southeast to listen for the VHF radio tags in an attempt to determine their routes and final destinations.

That's project #1. Number two involves Mexican Long-nosed Bats. For about a month beginning in mid-June, Bat Conservation International wants volunteers to join a team that will track their movements in and around Big Bend National Park in Texas as they pollinate century cactus plants. Physically fit hikers are especially wanted, but a few vehicle-based monitors will also be helpful. And there may be opportunities for some home monitors. Hams with VHF radio direction finding equipment are particularly needed.

Project #3 is a study of orphaned Great Horned Owls. It's being done by the Heard Natural Science Museum and Wildlife Sanctuary in McKinney, Texas, along with the University of North Texas. After being raised at the sanctuary, up to two dozen of these owls will be released into the wild this summer, with radio tags attached to help determine their dispersal patterns and survival rates. Volunteers are needed to monitor for the radio tags, especially in the Denton and Collin County areas. Great Horned Owls are territorial and do not migrate long distances.

My Web site on radio direction finding carries the latest details, frequencies, and contact information for all three projects. Point your browser to www.homingin.com HomingIn is one word --- homingin.com

Thanks in advance for your help! From southern California, where Burrowing Owls are diminishing but still can be seen in the farmlands, this is Joe Moell, Kay-zero-oscar-victor, for Amateur Radio Newsline.

Most Current info is:

Dave Munroe (doubt if that's real)
220 Paudash Road (doesn't show up on Yahoo Maps)
Hiawatha, Ontario, Canada K0L-2G0 (Again, the city of Hiawatha doesn't show on Yahoo, and this is a new city compared to his old city of Keene)
Cell phone (yeah right) is 705-313-1518

Mail is beginning to bounce to the lower case homesteaders2003@yahoo.com. My most recent email from him was dated in mid-May in which he claimed that the mail is slow.

He currently has several ID's still active on Ebay of "leanna2000", "-pokey-", "Quake99" and "Invest7". All have 0 feedback's but ebay only goes back 30 days for history now. So information is skimpy.

4424. Name this Antron Antenna..?

OK, time to play the Antenna name game...

I picked up an Antron Vertical antenna, reported to be for use somewhere in the HF Bands (which might include the CB portion).

This unit is a white colour, three section unit which appears similar to a Big stick, however one of the (mid or bottom) sections has three small radials comming out the side at about 45 degrees downward tilt. Said radials are actually appear to be less than a foot in lenght.

There is no model number on the antenna.

Your guess as to the model and or band of operation for this antenna..? It was sold used to my friend as a broadband HF antenna, but I don't think that's what it's made for... did/does Antron make a broadband antenna..?

OK for now, your help would be mucho appreciated. Just post your follow ups here on the news group and I'll read them.

It's an Antron 99, good for 10/11/12 (or 6 thru 20 meters with a tuner) with the completely unnecessary ground radial kit. That radial kit costs as much as the antenna itself but does nothing to improve performance!

If you need a copy of the original booklet, let me know.

The antenna is a Antron 1080B, even with a tuner its a dummy load.
this was antrons attempt to get the ham dollars for a all band veritcal that required a antenna tuner.
I bought one on the cheap for HF ended up putting my antron A-99 back up for 12/17 wouldnt talk across the block.

this thing about canadians ripping people off is like a disease that has spread the last few years.......because they are across the border they think they can get away with it, and it would appear, so far, that line of thinking holds true...........case in point........i hate to say it but just don't deal with anyone a long way away from you, much less in another country.........that is the way it is......unless you have your ass covered some how........too bad......but those are rules to live by.....

I would like to say that there is people like that all over the world. I buy items from Canada and the USA and I send the Money Order first, then the seller has it in his hand before he sends the item. The seller is protected and the buyer is protected by the Money Order as they can be traced. I note on each money order what the money is for, so they can be traced. Another good idea is register the item or use verification and then the person receiving the item has to sign for it, and it is traceable.

Please use your noggin when sending items to anyone, no matter where he lives.

I am a Canadian and the comments here are not justified.

As anyone can now see, in the past few days you have shown that you are so determined to save face in this newsgroup -- to prove that the mistakes you make aren't mistakes, that the lies you tell aren't lies -- that you will accept as proof any evidence, no matter how weak, illogical, miscontrued, manufactured, misquoted, distorted, or deceased it may be, to defend yourself. You must live a pathetically lonely existence if you get so much personal gratification from the attention given you by your tormentors, but since you don't have any friends, I guess the torment is better than no attention at all. Of course you could always create more anonymous personalities with which to carry on conversations. Or maybe someone will be so desperate for attention that they will seek the company of a worthless, disrespectful, lying airbag such as yourself. Or maybe you will try and snag some naive newbie and try and turn him into a troll. But don't count on it. And if it happens anyway, I'll be there to set them straight. Until then, I'll leave you to your empty and unrewarding hobby of trolling.

Neither. Nor am I N7VCF, Glenn Sparks, Big Ben, Leland Scott, or anybody else that Twistedhed has accused me of being. I am Frank Gilliland from Spokane, WA, former US Marine and Beirut vet, part-time broadcast engineer, and owner of a small business specializing in professional audio equipment repair, antique radio and guitar amp restoration, and custom-designed electronics (and no, I don't do business over the web anymore). I am nobody else, and nobody else is me.

Need evidence? Look at the ISPs:

www.cet.com
www.tincan.org www.dc4pc.net
www.aimcomm.net

ALL of them exclusively from Spokane. Not Seattle. Not Issaquah. Not Clark County. Not Texas.

Need more evidence? Look at his pics:

http://home.earthlink.net/~frankbarb/

Now look at mine:

www.aimcomm.net/sparky

Yeah, we both have beards. But notice the differences: He is skinny, active, and prancing around the mountains. OTOH, I can barely hoist my fat ass up the towers anymore just to change the lamps (yeah, I really need to lose a few pounds). He has black hair, mine is light brown. And notice that I'm wearing glasses.

Need more evidence?

Look at the dates when he was foraging around in the scrub. Then look through the archives for all my posts during those days. Then trace the IP numbers. They ALL come back to Spokane. And they ALL show that I was here in Spokane, posting to this newsgroup, while he was traversing the Canadian border and humping up Mt. Adams.

Normally I would say "get a clue", but now you have many. Balance this evidence against Twisty's paranoid suspicions. Then use your brain, quit being Twisty's lackie, and think for yourself.

Dick never had to repeat himself to those that suffer no communication deficit. We can comprehend information just fine the first time it is presented.
Odd you take issue with the man's word when he is dead, but you had nothing to say when he was alive concerning his facts.

Also, I snipped no link as there was none in the post of Dick's that I did post. Dick ignored Leland's off-topic rant and accusing him, of all people, of attacking Lelnad for a personal disageement...no,, we all know who has the personal problems on the half-brain.

Sure Lelnad was forged.,,,but nowhere did Dick claim it was I, despite your accusations and Lelnad's. Why would Lelnad expect anything less that what he dished out? Hypocrisy.

Allow me to place this in perspective,,,you are telling me I have no right accusing Lelnad of forging me or threatening me when I have an email from his isp claiming the offending user was terminated for violations of their service and he suddenly goes "poof", yet you accuse ME of doing the same, with much less "proof" as you so fondly refer.

>Wrong. You can accuse anybody you want,

I need accuse no one. With logic like Lelnad's and yours (N8 on the FCC bust list, but he didn;t do anything wrong) your ignorance precedes the both of you.

>and you usually do. But to claim that Dick

>"proved" your suspicions with nothing more

They weren't MY suspicions, but you have a hard time coming to terms with this,,,they were DICKS suspicions, and Lelnad attacking him on a personal note as he does everyone else in a sordid failed pathetic attempt at changing the subject was all the "proof" Dick, or anyone else needed. Like a predictable cockroach, theattempted deflection by Lid-Lelnad KC8LDO has always been to attack and attempt to discredit ANYONE who identified his behavior as compromised,,,Dick included,,this was a perfect example.

>Now why is this so hard for

Never happen, they are having to much fun trolling, look at how many posts Frank made in Twist's absentia.

I always have Frank, you forget I said when you talk tech I usually agree with you, when you are trolling, to which you were all weekend, I'll\ be on twists side any day of the week.

No Frank, not really. But what does it matter if he lies? For that fact you Lie? George? Leland?
It doesn't, it proves nothing more than trolling.
It's been going on for so long now, the truth is obscure to say the least.

Ok, you want to take sides. Before you commit, take these three things into consideration:

#1: All my responses to Twist, written "in absentia", were written well within 24 hrs of his post, and most within 12 hrs. Regardless, there is no law restricting when I may post, or any time limit after which I can no longer respond to a post. Matter of fact, there isn't even any unspoken rule about such things, because not everyone logs into the net at the same time (or didn't that ever occur to you?).

#2: I haven't said anything against you in well over a year, not even after sifting through hundreds (yes, HUNDREDS) of your posts whining about George and your killfile.

#3: The disagreement between Twistedhed and myself is none of your business. If you now choose to defend that low-life and make it your business, I will make you my business as well, and I will be all over your posts just as much as his.

#4: If all you want is for this to go away, then convince him to take it to email (he has refused to respond to my email). Otherwise, use that killfile you keep talking about.

The free-after-the-rebate charger can charge either kind. There is a switch on the side.

what is expected is for you to get bagged and tagged in TS groups looking for hook ups with bear type transexuals and then have the gall to say it was someone else using your computer. landshark you are a real wacknut, LOL.

Hey GW, it's a two way street. Perhaps you have been taken by someone in Canada in the past, but that is no reason to label all of us. I have conducted many transactions over the internet with fellow hams who I have never met before. If you would like names I will gladly provide them. I always give more than enough information how they can get ahold of me in case of problems, and I have yet to try and "take" anyone. Why would I bother? What will I accomplish from it? Absolutely nothing. Once I got taken by a ham in California who traded me his "perfect" TS440 for my Yaesu FT900, yeah I know!!, only to find the Kenwood had the dreaded VCO problem. He denied it of course, and I learned a valueable lesson. But I still trust most of the hams out there. So please don't go labeling all Canadians as "rip-off artists" . Perhaps you are still sore that both our men's and women's Olympic hockey teams kicked your ass!!

Oh, ok. My point was are you really that bored to reading it until Monday?

See your own rule #3 before you start on #2. Yes you haven't and that's cool, but at the same time you seem to be going over the deep end over twist, just like George does over me, are you that obsessed?

I'm not defending him, I'm merely pointing out you trolling and obsession with twist all of a sudden.
Be my guest as for my posts, again as for your trolling, I couldn't give a damn , but when you post about tech and most of your political views were not to far apart.

> #4: If all you want is for this to go away, then convince him to take it to

Now that's silly Frank, I can't make him do that anymore than you can or make George stop whinnying about me with his half dozen alias. You might ask him nicely, he might then e mail you, hey maybe he has e mailed you, I don't know.
As for the kill file, maybe pretty soon for you, but then would you still respond to my posts if I can't see them?
LOL!!!! I'll bet you would. You have said in the past you don't need a kill file, you use common sense on whether or not to respond, seems you don't follow your own advice.

See ya, monster garage has a great show on

They very well should be a decent amp steve, did you forget who designed them, to me they are the japanese version of the davemade as if you didnt already know that . You can have also have an inferior amp in a well setup vehichle and lose to someone with a good amp and a well setup vehichle. I would rather have a good amp to build my mobile around . But what do you know about keydowns? . People should have the choice to decide which one they want the Steve stick to what you know and thats selling amps . The x force team should have some success at keydowns depending on whom they key with , they are using just about everything dave designed , from the voice chip in the radio, to competition regulator, cap system , antenna systems, coax lengths and amplifiers. and so on and so on ...I guess we shall see soon enough ...

Aaron this info is 100% guaranteed to be true. i know the owner personally and he is a slug who started the business using money he collected from disability he used to drive a truck. Since he has made a fortune of the amplifier business he is thinking of getting out the next year or so i guess because of the heat. I am sure he avoided paying any type of taxes the past 3 years or so that he has been in business. He got his start with a guy named

Dan Frechette who now lives in Kankakee Illinois Dan worked for a guy in NJ named Dave well since then Dan better known as "123" took davemades design of amps, customers, method of operation, contacts etc and started the xforce line with the info he jacked from dave while he worked there So now he teams up with the ex- truck driver named ...Carl Curatola the current Owner of Xforce . he is located at 630 West Bolles Ave West Chicago Illinois.. his e mail is xforce151@aol.com he has done much business with exportradios.com and exportsrus whom was just popped by the FCC. The funny part is that Dan

123 screwed davemade when he went out there to work for him for about 6 months he left dave with all daves design info etc and went back to Illinois

he then got togther with Carl and now they used this hijacked info to duplictae davemaeds amp which has been pretty much declared the best amp of the keyclown crowd. The funny part is that the duo of Dan and Carl parted ways when carl became greedy I hear and wanted all the money. Since he got what he wanted out of Dan the guy who had the Davemade design info he didnt need him any longer so Dan left and started another amp to compete with xforce but that didnt last long... To my knowledge the guy dave doesnt sell his amps any longer since he got screwed over buy Dan and another hack has picked up the name and is selling them. But there you have it in a nutshell

Xforce Owner is Carl Curratola

Hello Train: Yes these guys can be cruel all right.

Train think of it this way......

While where out rockin & rollin, whistling at pretty girls, having a life, shootin skip, cashin and spendin welfare checks, these guys are recitin rules and regulations.

I'll go with the rock & roll, shootin skip, and pretty girls. Yeah!

No time to do the ng now, I have miss Dinah comin over to BBQ and rock & roll. Whooo hooo! After she gets all liquiored up we shot birds off the cactus. And then carry on.....

hey dick with ears if you want to be wrong then fine but I'm not george, and george doesn't have AOL anyway. He has been posting from the same comcast IP now for years, thats his only IP and no other so how can I be him?

Watch now moped will answer with some insult against george, so predictable.

The Forgery
==========

Prior to April 7, 2001, and despite personal disagreements, there is no post by Dick McCollum accusing, implying or even suggesting that Leland Scott was forging anybody. OTOH, Twistedhed had accused Scott of forging posts since at least March 2:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=5439-3A9FBEA9-5%40storefull-125.iap.bryant.webtv.net

On April 7, 2001, came the now infamous "You ask w" post in rec.radio.cb. The first reply was by Twistedhed who, noting a similarity between the cut line and Leland Scott's sig, accused Scott of forging the post. Dick McCollum responded -not- to the forgery, but to -Twistedhed's reply- to the forgery, and agreed with Twistedhed's conclusion:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=5JGz6.393%24K54.175936%40nntp3.onemain.com

An admission to the forgery was posted (anonymously) which emphasized previously unnoticed details in the forgery that, while not absolving Scott of the forgery, unequivocally contradicted Twistedhed's argument. Dick McCollum did not respond.

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=0hpB6.45236%240s.9380428%40news1.rdc2.pa.home.com

Afterwards, McCollum notified Leland Scott of posts being forged in -his- name. They also had many polite conversations during Dick's remaining time.

The Issaquah Confusion
======================

On March 29, 2001, I noted a "local civil case" where a "lady successfully sued her neighbor for causing a nuisance with his illegal CB equipment":

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=3ac3a9f4.1459137%40news.cet.com

On April 20, 2001, Twistedhed found a post from Big Ben noting a case similar to the case I mentioned. Citing the similarity, and while ignoring the service area of my ISP at the time (www.cet.com), he promptly accused me of being Big Ben and of living in Clark County:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=22267-3AE05E02-192%40storefull-127.iap.bryant.webtv.net

This accusation was also made despite many previous postings by me to the contrary, and as early as Jan. 16, 2001:

http://groups.google.com/groups?q=g:thl785822696d&dq=&hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=3a65076e.2113568%40news.cet.com

After months of constant prodding, I responded to Twistedhed's pleas for proof of my statement by posting an entire newspaper article about the case in Spokane to which I originally referred:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&threadm=3ade1b9d.77554%40news.cet.com&rnum=5&prev=/groups%3Fq%3D%2B%2522Kathy%2BMulady%2522%2Bgroup:rec.radio.cb%26num%3D100%26hl%3Den%26lr%3D%26ie%3DUTF-8%26safe%3Doff%26scoring%3Dd%26filter%3D0

Twistedhed, dumbfounded that there could be two similar cases in the same state, proceeded to blow a smokescreen around his mistake by confusing the issue, maintaining that I live on the West side of the state, accusing me of being N7VCF, and of forging a post that he himself wrote:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&threadm=3b3bd1a3.2202876%40news.cet.com&rnum=3&prev=/groups%3Fq%3D%2B%2522Kathy%2BMulady%2522%2Bgroup:rec.radio.cb%26num%3D100%26hl%3Den%26lr%3D%26ie%3DUTF-8%26safe%3Doff%26scoring%3Dd%26filter%3D0

He is still hiding behind that smokescreen, still maintaining that I am N7VCF and that I live in Issaquah:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=11733-3EE108B1-399%40storefull-2315.public.lawson.webtv.net

Those are the facts in black and white... er, 1's and 0's. Stay tuned, there's more exciting episodes ahead!

I've read of many problems with those chargers. My friend's wouldn't stop charging, and mine kept charging the included AA cells for fifteen hours, even though the cells had been hot several hours prior.
It seems that this charger doesn't really detect full charge but normally just measures the amount of time the charger has been running, which can be very bad for the cells.

wrote:

>Random question...
>who cares where you live?

I'm glad you asked that question Raffi: The answer is that Twistedhed cares deeply who I am and where I live. For example:

First he accused me of being Leland Scott in Michigan (KC8LDO) because both of us posted through Supernews:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=16705-3AE183E6-10%40storefull-127.iap.bryant.webtv.net

Then he accused me of being Glenn Sparks in Houston (KI5GY) because his name is similar to my nic:

http://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&lr=&ie=UTF-8&safe=off&selm=21337-3AED7306-105%40storefull-122.iap.bryant.webtv.net

And below I have already provided the reasons why he accused me of being Ben Lee in Vancouver (KC7UIP), and of being a different Frank Gilliland in Issaquah (N7VCF). The funny thing is that I'm not even a ham! And then there are some in this newsgroup that are naive and..., well, just plain stupid, and will believe anything anyone says as long as it satifies a special need. Many of them follow the delusions of Twistedhed and think I am N7VCF. Some even think that I might be Dwight Stewart (W5NET), or even George Busch (WA3MOJ). They just can't accept that some people don't need to lie about their identity.

So you see, to some people it really does matter. In fact, to Twistedhed, my identity is his whole reason for existence. But there is one other person that cares where I live -- me. Cause if I don't live in Spokane then I have been away from home WAY too long (almost 40 years) and should be running home pretty soon.
It would also mean that my driver's license is wrong, as well as a host of other important documents I have signed over the years. So if I'm not me, then I have a whole lot of paper work and legal issues to deal with.

I hope that answers your question. Got another question?

Friend sent this to me .....

All the radio shops near DAD were raided over the last week and ALL of them lost stock and were issued with a huge fine..
The shop Dad normally deals with lost over $50.000 worth of stock and was fined $10,000 by the FCC.
He was given this notice that Dad scanned and sent to me and he was told ALL shops in US will be visited by Xmas for these and other radios not listed here...
Looks like they are gonna get hard on them..
Also they took ALL amplifiers capable of being used above 15Mhz....
He also told me that on his trip he was stopped twice by FCC cars looking for Out-of-Band Radios & Amplifiers...
Ham operators are ok to have the amps but NOT the out-of-band radios....
Looks like the market is gonna dry up over there soon..
Dada says all the people he knows with OOB rigs are now getting them out of their cars because the FCC is doing checkpoints like BoozeBus stops on the roads...I will keep you informed as Dad lets me know...
Just thought you mite be interested..

4487. ILLEGAL CB TRANSCEIVER LIST

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb

IILLEGAL CB TRANSCEIVER LIST

The FCC's Office of Engineer and Technology (OET) has evaluated the devices listed below and has concluded that these devices are not only amateur transceivers but can easily be altered for use as Citizens Band (CB) transceivers as well. As such, OET has further concluded that these devices cannot legally be imported or marketed within the United States for the reasons discussed below. Further, the FCC General Council has issued a decision in a specific case involving one manufacturer and has concluded that dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue may not be approved under the Commission's rules and are in violation of several rules including the RF power level limits of 47 CFR 95.639.
Transceivers used in the Amateur Radio Service below 30 MHz do not require FCC authorization prior to being imported into or marketed within the United States, but transceivers for other services, including the CB Radio Service (CB), do require Commission approval. The transceivers listed herein and other similar models operate in the amateur "10-meter band" and are often referred to as "10-meter" radios or "export" radios. The amateur 10-meter band uses frequencies that are very close to the channels set aside for use in the CB service. Some of the transceivers that manufacturers call "10-meter" radios either operate on CB frequencies as manufactured and imported or are designed such that internal circuits can readily be activated by a user, a service technician or a dealer to operate on CB frequencies. According to Section 95.603(c) of the Commission's rules, a CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service. 47C.F.R. § 95.603(c). The Commission's equipment authorization experts in the FCC Laboratory have determined that the transceivers listed herein and other similar models at issue here are intended for use on the CB frequencies as well as those in the amateur service because they have built-in capability to operate on CB frequencies. This capability can be readily activated by moving or removing a jumper plug, cutting or splicing a wire, plugging in a connector, or other simple means. Thus, all the transceivers listed herein and similar models fall within the definition of a CB transmitter. See 47C.F.R. § 95.603(c). A CB transmitter must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation. 47 C.F.R. §§ 95.603(c); 2.803.
Moreover, the dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certified under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) states: "§.([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services § will not be certificated.)" See also Amendment of Part 95, Subpart E, Technical Regulations in the Personal Radio Services Rules, FCC 88-256, 1888 WL 488084 (August 17, 1988). This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id, and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

In addition, the Commission's equipment authorization experts have determined that these devices violate or appear to violate a number of the rules governing CB devices. For example, they may use emission types not permitted, or emit RF power at a level in excess of the levels permitted in the CB radio service. See 47 C.F.R. § 95.639.
In view of the foregoing, the following "10-meter" transceivers are not acceptable for importation or marketing into/within the United States. Importation and marketing of these units is illegal pursuant to Section 302(b) of the Communications Act and Section 2.803 of the rules. Willful violations of the Rules and the Act may subject the violator to a monetary forfeiture of not more than $11,000 for each violation or each day of a continuing violation. The Commission continues to review this type of equipment, and additional makes and models may be added to this list in the future.
LIST OF TRANSCEIVERS
ILLEGAL TO IMPORT OR MARKET

Your offended that he's disrespecting Richard Mccollum?
Please, you said the same thing when I wrote about having the first of the year. I meant to say the first baby of the year and you put some sort of sinister spin on it. Richard responded with "I'm supposedly the victim, but you are acting like the victim". Dick didin't really care about this type of bs, he mainly stuck with tech issues.

Friend sent this to me .....
All the radio shops near DAD were raided over the last week and ALL of them lost stock and were issued with a huge fine.. The shop Dad normally deals with lost over $50.000 worth of stock and was fined $10,000 by the FCC.
He was given this notice that Dad scanned and sent to me and he was told ALL shops in US will be visited by Xmas for these and other radios not listed here...
Looks like they are gonna get hard on them.. Also they took ALL amplifiers capable of being used above 15Mhz.... He also told me that on his trip he was stopped twice by FCC cars looking for Out-of-Band Radios & Amplifiers...
Ham operators are ok to have the amps but NOT the out-of-band radios....
Looks like the market is gonna dry up over there soon.. Dada says all the people he knows with OOB rigs are now getting them out of their cars because the FCC is doing checkpoints like BoozeBus stops on the roads...I will keep you informed as Dad lets me know... Just thought you mite be interested..
Can anyone back this up.....

The FCC doesn't operate in Asia nor Australia,,it's stricly an American entity.
In America, the FCC does not engage in road blocks nor searches. IF a search is to be conducted in any manner whatsoever, a LEO will accompany the FCC. An FCC agent is NOT allowed to open doors, closets, compartments, etc..in other words, they are limited to visual identification of your station, nothing more, and even then, a local LEO more than likely would be present. Your information is bogus.

Ahhh.......Frankie still swiming in Twisted Juice,,,,trying so hard, so desperate,,illustrating he cares more about what others..of course Dick didn't respond to Lelnad,,,Lelnad's accusations of Dick trying to frame him were childish, off-topic, and typical of Lelnad..it's why Dick ignored him and "didn't respond". Nice of you to hang yourself with the original post where you claimed a "local" was busted....Hey Frankie,,,,when did you retire from the USMC? "According to Google"..you didn't......what type active Marine doesn't rememner Fire School and has the amount of time you do to stir up strife, hate and discontent on this ng? You did you were still in the Marine Corp, Frankie,,,poor, Frankie,,the more you swim in google juice the more your lies come to fruition. Take a long deep breath, Frankie, and try to remain relevant and related to cb,,,or are you incapable of anything but illustrating your blind rage and inability to control yourself?

Frank and Lelnad are ate up with identities of cbers. Frank likes to pay hide and seek and have newsgroupies "guess" where he may be oozing from.
Both have been twisted that way for some time. It gets even weirder when the tables are turned with their inquiries of where or who other cbers may be,,they destroyed their own reputations and now seek to destroy those that aren't as foolish as they.

Another lie. Gilliland and Lelnad patented the search for identities of cbers and not only brought this game to my plate, but wrote the rules for this game. Frank is just a lid hypocrite who cries like a baby when the tables are turned. He can't take what he dishes out,,astutely illustrated.

(Snicker) Is that what he claimed? I missed that one....last I saw he claimed he was still active in the USMC,,,he probably lied about both. Frankie has a problem taking what he dishes out. Concerning his google swim in twisted juice, google bears out that Lelnad and he patented the identity factor of cbers in this forum. Google will show I inquired of and made no observations of "who is who" until these two lids constructed their game around my identity. Losing at their own game was too much for these lids to handle,,hence the destructive posting full of malice, the hate sites, the numerous posting accesses to the group each had lost.

I don't know where you get your information, pinhead, but it doesn't agree with my DD-214, or the address on all the letters sent and received, or all the pictures I have, or all..... well, you get the idea (maybe).

Perhaps you are confused: You see, each battallion of the 8th Regiment rotated with each float as an attachment to either the 22nd or 24th MAU. You may have looked up the records for personel assigned to the 24th MAU, not the attachments.
Also, I never retired, so again your information is incorrect. Care to post your source?

Oh, 'da irony....,,Frankie asking for a source...lol. Despicable. Nothing worse than a scumbag posing as a military man when he is the furthest thing from it. Hey Frank, which position in the USMC allows you to post hate and discontent all day long? When do you retire, Frankie? Do these RF cb pirates affect your secret work with cb aliens as your job as a civilian/military contractor/US Marine?engineer broadcaster? Gee Frankie,,,do try to keep your lies in some type order......

"#1" should state that YOU initiated this public thread, Frankie, despite MY claims to take your personal problems to email. "#2" should show that YOU (again) initiated this "disagreement" with myself by entering yourself in a hostile manner into the public thread, the same in which you now hypocritically chide another for doing in the same manner you did.

>#2: I haven't said anything against you in well

>over a year,

Well, that certainly makes it better,,,,,despite your off-topic and unfounded accusations and lies directed toward him,,the same despicable lies that Geogre employs.

>not even after sifting through hundreds (yes,

>HUNDREDS) of your posts whining about

>George and your killfile.

Blaming another for your problems of no self-control and the ability to get beyond what you can't handle.......as usual.

>#3: The disagreement between Twistedhed

>and myself is none of your business.

If that holds true, then your rude insertion of yourself in the original thread in the same manner holds true for you as well,,,,wait,,,,,that's right,,you hold yourself above rules and regulations and the same standards do not apply toyourself, of course..

>If you now choose to defend that low-life and >make it your business, I will make you my >business as well, and I will be all over your >posts just as much as his.

Another threat, coupled with attempted blackmail. this has been poor Gillinad's problems all alonfg,,note how the gist of his word is that if one posts in a manner that Gillinad doesn't agree with or sees fits, he will attack you personally.

>#4: If all you want is for this to go away, then >convince him to take it to email (he has >refused to respond to my email). Otherwise, >use that killfile you keep talking about.

And again the desperate attempt at trying to lay HIS problems off on another....."IF only Twist would do this",,it would be ok,,"If only twist would go away"..lol...poor Gillinad.....the problem is I refuse to conform to the lid's demands and he's coming unglued. He desperately craves control and his threatening posts with blackmail attempts are illustrative of what he is about. He needs control and his impotence in this group is rendering him reckless and pathetic. I have asked him to take his problmes to email many times,,he prefers to exhibit his threats in a public manner.

Tut-tut, Frankie,,,,,,I'm much too loud in DX land for anyone to buy that old line,,,but the malice shows through just as it does in your threats against those who refuse to post as you see fit.

>#2: I haven't said anything against you in well

(giggle) Someone TWIST your arm to "sift" through anything? LOL!

(Yes you haven't and that's cool, but at the same time you seem to be going over the deep end over twist, just like George does over me, are you that obsessed?)

>No, I am that offended. If you respected Dick >at all, you too should be offended that Twist is >misrepresenting him in order to defend his

Here we go again. I did nothing but post his post in it''s entirety, despite your claim that A) it was snipped (it wasn't),
B) Dick was following MY accusation, then reversing yourself (flip flopping) and claiming I was following Dick's accusation. The facts are, you ahven't a clue and your flip flopping on the issue illustrates such. Your desperation at what others think of you is revealed in your refusals to take your personal problems of a non-cb nature to email. .

>#3: The disagreement between Twistedhed

>and myself is none of your business.

And the conversation in which you decided to insert yourself with an attack upon myself and publically humiliate yourself to the world WAS your business?

>If you now choose to defend that low-life and

Such malicious threats....again,,,this clearly states that if he does not post in a manner in whcih you agree with, you will attack him personally with offtopic lies and rants. This is a control issue stemming from your feelings of self-loathe and low self-esteem. Go soak your head,,,you're impotent and no one will conform to what you insist.

(I'm not defending him, I'm merely pointing out you trolling and obsession with twist all of a sudden.)

>#4: If all you want is for this to go away,

Ahhh,,the proverbial bribe....the familiar blackmail, "IF you want peace in the ng" you must conform to what poor no-esteem Frankie insists.......hahhaha....a wannabe little Ceasar is what Frankie is.

>then

If you can't send me email, you're blocked by your own service via MSN for harassment. Thanks for admitting such, but most of us see your mode of operation.

(Now that's silly Frank, I can't make him do that anymore than you can or make George stop whinnying about me with his half dozen alias. You might ask him nicely, he might then e mail you, hey maybe he has e mailed you, I don't know.)

No,,your point has been illustrated that you wish others conform to your

I was informed the forged "respect for freebanders" by 64.12.102.48 was recently entered into the hall of shame. Also appears a few ARRL members are suddenly paying attention,,,Lelnad apparently was informed as well, as he suddenly wiped his mouth and stopped burping outloud. Nevertheless, I believe what is happening in hammie radio at this point is a good thing. Most folks seem to have their priorities in order regarding enforcement...on the air, and on the internet.

look how when Twisty gets cornered by Frank with questions he can't answer so suddenly this marine thing comes up. Can you say "diversion"?
LOL. Twistednuts, you are so predictable.

The changing of the subject was done by Frank, just as he initated snipping into the thread. I illustrated Dick's position on recognizing Lelnad's forge,,,Frank went nuts and went on a google rampage, posting all kinds of things that have nothing to do with Lelnad forging folks OR Dick. HE changed the subject, not I. I merely followed suit by your own rules which you expertly demonstrate you each can not abide.

Hey, ,,this "Marine" thing was brought up by Frank himself long ago , as is all non=related items...check the dates.

LOL..yea,,Frank is going crazy all over the placeswimming in goolgle juice and Lelnad will never recover from his stained reputation.

Well, if he's not retired, and his many claims say he is a Marine, logical deductions would point to an active military career. Since you do not deal with logic and suffer from a communication deficit, I see where this would trip you up.

> Could he be in the reserves?

Marine reserves? Frankie?
Hahhahahhahhahhahhahhahhahhahahhahahhahaha,,,what did he do,,,skip Fire School?
This proves it,,any other marine can deduct the same by his embarrassing post of:

This is where he claimed he was active. I need not explain, as active and ex-military know he is full of shit. I'm half tempted to go against my better judgement and take this to a military forum.......it's despicable when one needs impersonate a US Marine in order to compensate for their low self-esteem and for.....who knows why he did it......

I understand it completely.

Unfortunately, I can't afford to hire americans to do this work. They want 3-10* as much money, and then we get to do the union dance... (That's where the union makes me pay you more, so they can take a slice, then do essentially nothing for you, while telling me I can't promote the most competent, I can only promote the most senior..) No thanks.

If I hired americans for the assembly line, then my products would cost 20-50% more than my competition with the same thing, and nobody employed or not would be buying mine. Now those amreicans would be back on unemployment, my investors would be screaming, and my competition would be buying up my equipment on the cheap so they can ship it offshore and expand their operations.

At some point, wages should more or less level out worldwide.
Until that happens, manufacturing is going to minimize human labor wherever possible, and go to the lowest practical labor cost.

What's forcing us to do that? YOU the consumers.

I'm an employed american. I stay that way by educating myself (instead of watching TV or bar hopping) so that the value of what I do is quite high.

I'm fairly certain that the switch does nothing but increase the charging current for NiMHs, which usually have higher capacities than nicads.

Since yesterday, I've heard of yet another failure of this charger, and again the problem was that it wouldn't shut off, this time for a whole 24 hours.

questions and throwing out chaff and firing flares etc in order to distract truth-seeking missiles that have locked onto him.

Yes, Twist back up to your old tricks, are you trying to drag me into your

it be the word Obsession.. we see you are that obsessed.

Here we go again. I did nothing but post his post in it''s entirety, despite your claim that A) it was snipped (it wasn't),
B) Dick was following MY accusation, then reversing yourself (flip flopping) and claiming I was following Dick's accusation. The facts are, you ahven't a clue and your flip flopping on the issue illustrates such.
Your desperation at what others think of you is revealed in your refusals to take your personal problems of a non-cb nature to email. .

I just bought my wife a new Jeep Liberty about two ago. We are planning a vacation out West next week. I would like to have some sort of CB Radio in the jeep for this vacation. Space is very limited and so are my options. I was at Radio Shack today. They have a hand held Model 21-1679 that looks expectable for my use. Can someone give me your opinion of this radio. It will be used mostly for road conditions. Any help or suggestions would be greatly appreciated.

Handhelds suck. No noise reduction circuits. Get a proper mobile radio and an antenna with a whip portion 5 feet long or longer. Anything else will work as good as a pair of FRS handhelds, which work better then CB walkie talkies. If real close, use FRS. If not so close, try MURS (VHF).
CB is good for highway info.

As is Frankie-boy and you, Georgie-girl. Just so darned predictable!
You think Frankie-boy can't answer for himself?

A DD-214 says he was discharged. Could have been for almost any reason except a courts-martial. So they kicked him out because he was gay? Or just stupid?

What do you care what Scott cares about? Are you obsessed with him or something?

But a point, if I may. A previous poster in this thread claimed that when CB was expanded to 40 channels, 23-channel radios became illegal to use or re-sell. That's horse-hockey, as far as I can tell. You can still find and buy 23 channel radios and it's perfectly legal to use them. Why a person would want to is another question, of course, but they are not illegal to use.

All cellular-capable scanners did not become "illegal" when the ECPA of '86 became law. Retailers (like Radio Shack) could no longer import and sell them retail, but owners could still use them and sell them on the used market.

Same with Uniden and RCI and other 10 meter radios. They are > not < illegal to possess or use, as long as the user has the proper class of amateur license. They can be re-sold on the used market, too. They simply cannot be imported in quantity and sold on the retail market legally.

Seems there's a lot of bad information being spouted by alleged hams (who should know better, given their superior education) in this thread. All this stuff was corrected and discredited more than a year ago in this same newsgroup!

Blah blah blah who cares about your anal list of legal loop holes. We all know you think its perfectly legal to do whatever you like as long as you have some fake Dickie Craniumless excuse ready. Find 10 meters on scott the main point here is he bought his wife the vehicle. think she wants an antenna hanging off of her pride and joy? the unit he is

You can get a brand name RAYOVAC at most Wal-Mart, Target, K-Mart type stores for 9.99 that's a MUCH better charger. It charges each individual battery by itself and not through all the other cells. Your batteries will last MUCH longer if they are charged individually.

I wouldn't be surprised. The charger does charge at a rather high rate, taking 8 hours to recharge NiCd cells. I like to take it slow, using 14-16 hours for that. The charger has a timing circuit that is supposed to cut off after 8 hours.

The charger has a one year warranty. For the first 30 days, you can exchange at the place of purchase for a new one, but after that, you have to send it the company HQ on Long Island. Also, you have to pay $10 for postage and handling: this for a scanner that is free after the rebate. No way.

I guess what that means is, 30 days from now, I could open it up and see how to modify the circuit. As long as the case and transformer are good, I could improve the circuit as I saw fit.

Best wishes.

The Radio Shack Model 21-1679 radio has a BNC antenna connector. I can use a magnetic antenna to improve performance some. But I agree from past experience (20 years ago) handhelds suck. I was hoping modern technology had improved the CB handheld radios.

Depends on what you get shot with, what the bullet does on it's way through, and what is damaged in the process.

Transformer??? Someone makes a battery charger with a TRANSFORMER?? I haven't seen one of those made in about 10 years.. all seem to be made with either switchers or cheap supplies that just regulate the line voltage down..

What really bothers me is that he is getting packages at this address!!! The Canadian postal system is quite strange. I'm beginning to suspect that the city is ignored by the postal employees (kind of like the US system), and the only thing that is valid is the postal (zip) code. The street address is the same as it has been when he was heavy into scamming two years ago. The city was Keene back then. Mr Munroe trys to keep search engines confused by changing the city. I have to admit he has this scam down quite well. I contacted him and he seemed like a very friendly "good ol' boy" and even sent me JPG's of the radio he was wanting to swap. We exchanged several emails BSing about different subjects, and I finally agreed to take a chance and send the radio up to him. I was duped by one of the finest con artists I have ever ran across! What me do search on his name? He seems like such a nice guy!!! He must be for real. WRONG!!!! This guy is a complete thief!! Don't trust him!

Read Scott's reply again. The fact is that the antenna system (shortened beyond all belief) and the ground (virtually non-existent) will conspire to leave you with maybe a half mile to a mile of communications range. Seriously. I'm not kidding, and neither is Scott. FRS will likely net you more.

I've been contacted by several persons who were in the middle of deals with "Dave" and realize that they have been taken. His email addresses of Homesteaders2003@yahoo.com and homesteaders2003@yahoo.com are both now saying "No such user", so apparently he has discontinued these.

One person was kind enough to send the number of the Peterborough County OPP (Ontario Provincial Police). They can be reached at 705-742-0401. Please contact them if you've been ripped off!!! Even if your in the middle of a deal with "Dave", please call them. You won't receive whatever you have sent for.

Also keep an eye on Ebay or Yahoo auctions for your items. This is the quickest way for this thief to move the items. Post his auction ID to this thread if you spot your gear. If you correspond with anybody with this particular address then post his email address!!!

Repost of old info, but it might help to put it into this thread.

A serious warning about Dave Munroe, Internet scammer, living in Keene, Ontario, Canada. In addition to Internet and eBay theft, he's now added mail fraud to the list. He sends letters of payment, supposedly with cash payments, but there's nothing in the envelope except the actual letter. A police officer he scammed opened one of these in front of Postal Employees, mail fraud charges are being filed.

If you have ordered anything and sent payment to one of these two addresses, you've been scammed:

Dave Munroe Alternate Address:
R.R. #2 Keene 220 Paudash Road
Ontario, Canada Keene, Ontario Canada
K0L2G0 K0L2G0
(705) 295-4688 (705) 295-4612

He has also used a Peterborough address and several alias names for eBay auction site bidding, where he "bids up" his own merchandise, receives payment, and sends nothing. Two people so far have lost over $100 each on eBay purchases, several others are possible victims. The eBay site management has been notified of his aliases and activities, but he uses falsified user information to avoid capture.

17 verified incidents of Internet and eBay auction theft are known so far, and more possible... we're waiting for email from several more.

This guy advertises for sale or trade of computer, ham radio, electronic, and camping gear. He NEVER sends his agreed part of transaction, money or goods, and after the shipment arrives, he never answers e-mails and the phone number is never answered (used to be a BBS line he ran).

In August, he has scammed a half-dozen people for hard drives and modems. In addition, he's recently been advertising Asus motherboards and a Cyrix mini-tower system in non-forsale newsgroups, since warnings have been issued in all for-sale areas.

He has used these aliases for email, auction sites, and Internet theft:

Beliver@mailtag.com
Doc@mailtag.com
Radio456@mailtag.com
Midnight@mailtag.com
canoe@mailtag.com
camper@mailtag.com
Quake99@beer.com
Quake99@ductape.com
ont@nettaxi.com
dave_ontario@yahoo.com

If you are doing ANY business with someone in the Keene/Peterborough area of Ontario, BE SURE you have good contact info with your party... contact both work and home phones and addresses, etc. This guy seems to have a few available phone numbers, and at least 3 mailing/shipping addresses.

If you've been involved in a fraudulent sale with Dave Munroe, please contact tedblankenship@worldnet.att.net or Rick Park at rickpark@earthlink.net . Complaints have been filed with the Canadian authorities, and various Internet authorities and email providers

Ah yes, the r.r.cb FAQ posted and maintained by the self-declared "CB amp god"

Bill, you know as well as I do that there is no charter for rrcb. This newsgroup was started by the hams to kick CBers out of the ham groups.

>We only hear from the government when Mrs. Craven down the street files a >complaint with her Congressman!

Not true. Not in the least. MANY complaints are filed each year with the FCC regarding illegal operation of CB amps. Sometimes the FCC doesn't even hear the complaint because it's filed locally as a civil suit against an illegal operator for causing a nuisance via RFI in their home electronics. Get your facts straight, Bill.

>please do not comment unless you are an active CBer

Why is that, Bill? I thought you said that:

>there is no such thing as unlimited discussion here. This newsgroup is chartered >for discussion of all aspects of CB radio.

So why do you think it should be limited to active CB radio operators, and no discussion should be allowed by any other person within the topic -- despite your claims to the contrary? You aren't a hypocrite, are you Bill?

>When a ham comes to 27MHz to operate, he "checks his license at the door" and >operates on the same basis as everyone else--a Citizen

Maybe you should rephrase that: "When a ham comes to 'CB radio' to operate...". There is a big difference, Bill. CB radio, i.e, Citizen's Band Radio, is LEGAL, while 11-meter/27MHz includes the illegal 'freebands'. CB radio is used by CITIZENS, while illegal frequencies are used by CRIMINALS. Why didn't you make that distinction, Bill? I think it's an important issue, since illegal operation can land you a fine of up to $17,000. So why aren't you telling people that, Bill?

>...you will be alerted that the original poster was a Troll and you can avoid >taking the bait.

So THAT'S your excuse for not telling people the possible penalties for operating an illegal CB station? Because you consider legal activists to be "trolls"?

>CB stands for "Citizen's Band" radio. It got that name because its main idea >is to be a kind of radio service anyone can use.

That's not true Bill, and you know it because it's been posted too many times for you to ignore. CB radio was intended as a SHORT-RANGE radio service for PERSONAL and BUSINESS use. It WASN'T intended to be some sort of license-free ham band!

>an article about a CB radio for sale should be cross-posted to rec.radio.cb >and rec.radio.swap with a distribution limited to your city, state or region

Where the hell did you get THAT, Bill? I have seen NOTHING that even REMOTELY suggests what you describe. The newsgroup rec.radio.swap is for selling or buying radio equipment -- rec.radio.cb is for discussion only.

>Remember, for co-phasing antennas they must be at least 1/4 wavelength apart >to gain any benefit; which, for the 11 meter band, is around 9 feet.

That's a pile of crap, Bill. The key word is "phase", and as long as the antennas are "in phase" you will have some gain to the front and rear. The best gain is when the distance is 1/4 wave, but by no means is that mandatory to get any benefit from phased antennas.

I'll admit that your omission of the part about illegal amps is an improvement, but it would be much better if you could provide the link to the faq without the intermediate page about transmitter mods and CB "tricks", all of which are illegal.

BTW, how's it coming with your ultimate CB amp? You know, the amp that is supposed to revolutionize the amp industry because it's so quiet? And why haven't we seen any posts from you recently?

LOL! But remember that the FCC is never going to bite Twisty if he's an illegal alien. They'll just have him deported back to the half-educated, disease-ridden, flea-infested third-world country he came from, whether it's Arkansas, Florida, Zeta-Reticuli, or even Cuba.

Anyone have a one of these?
I need a broken or not workin' radio for parts. I could use one of each.

Maybe a trade for 1 457 and 1 458?
Or 2 458's. I have a 2970 minus the amp.
That's a RCI 2970 without the 100W amp
I would trade for a couple radios.

The front panels of the Navaho's must be clean and free from excessive wear.

Scott & Jim's answers are correct, if you are only going to talk a couple hundred of feet, it will work ok, any farther it will most likely be useless.
FRS will give you a better audio that close, but very limited in distance. Murs will give you good audio & ok distance, but the cost of the units will not be cheap.
If you are going to use a magnet mount, why not get a small uniden or cobra then? It will perform much better than a handheld.

"Got out"? In "85"? From the US MARINES? Why is there no "honorable

You weren't wounded in the military Frank,,at least not by enemy fire and especially in the Marines with a deployment that couldn't have taken place in the manner and timeline you describe....you already told someone a few years ago you haven't retired from the military,,this lends the deliberate impression you were still active,,even the Pa loser chimed in and tried to rally a smokescreen of a defense for you by claiming you perhaps were "reserves" with that unkempt appearance, illustrating their ignorance of the military,,,,,your own playmates interpreted your words exactly how you intended them to read: deliberately misleading and intended to convey something that isn;t true...(the story of your life).

Man oh man! Check it out,,many of our neighbors to the north are being forced to sell their winter vacation homes here as per the decline of the Canadian dollar,,,many are being let go for way under assessed value......the taxes have been raised on the Canadians second homes here, really putting a crimp in their ability to deal,,,,,,,cash talks and I see a definite decline of northerners...one last note,,,,the west coast of the pile is as different form the east coast of the 'pile as northern Cal is from southern Cal.....we don't have the immigrant problems like Miami and the rest of the areas over there....the most likely thing to float into my salt water pond is some stray RF and harmonics from La Marque,,not some make-shift flotilla with several generations looking to make it to the promised land.

Hey, anyone looking for a badass CRT monitor? I just recently bought from the Dell website a new 21" monitor. It's a SonyCPD-G520P. Talk about an awesome richness in color and clarity! I had on this machine a Dell P1110, which is also made my Sony and is a 21, but this new one blows it away! So, the kids get the old one, and I get to put off getting glasses a little longer. Sure, it's expensive, but so are most things of quality.

Anyway, just thought I'd pass the info along.

Hey assclown maybe marines have to be career soldiers before they are called officially retired? What happens when you enlist at 18 and serve your hitch and honorably discharge at 22? Are you called "retired" after that? What circumstances does a marine list his name as "Pvt Smith, USMC Ret."??? Lots of questions here but none of them answered by

Let Windows Media Player do a spectrum display under bars & waves.

It's light in Hawaii 6 hours after it gets dark on the east coast, then the noise drops down. I've heard this same stuff on 27 MHz.

Prior to WWII it was not uncommon for a soldier to spend his entire career as a Private or some other low rank, then retire at that rank. That doesn't mean he was a bad soldier, just that he was never given any responsibilities that required a higher rank, for whatever reason -- poor education, disability, dumb as a rock, etc.

OK, I'm back...

First off, thank you to everyone who replied with the information. The antenna in question turns out to be the Antron 8010.

It was reported to be said beast... but I put it on a return loss bridge and it's preformance was pretty crappy. So I thought the antenna was bad or made for some other model/band.

From the reports I've seen posted, this model antenna is not a very good preformer anyway.... I'm tempted to see what's in side. It acts like a big thick resistor so far.

cheers and again thanks... I'll stay with the other vertical for now.

Yes,

There are a number of kits sold by various antenna companies for adapting mobile antennas to base station applications.

You would probably have to use the type of adapter which provides a ground plane (horizontal or angled 45 for most typical ground plane radials). Said radials will probably need to be about 102 inches or shortened electricly with loading coils.

Everything changes everything... shortened antenna radials trade size for bandwidth. The radial angle changes the feedpoint impedance. I like to add a small hairpin match which also provides a dc ground.

Check with some of the larger CB and antenna stores for the mounts made by PAL and similar companies.

I love it: "Legal loop holes"! You display your complete and total ignorance with that single statement. And typically, you do not address the salient points mentioned in my post. You cannot argue > facts < so you resort fo an ad hominum statement. The > fact < is that every time there's a change in a law, exsisting whatevers are "grandfathered" in. For example: If they change the building code, your existing building is OK, regardless. When they passed the ECPA of 1986, all previously existing cellular restorable and cellular capable scanners did not become magically "illegal" overnight; they can still be possessed, used, and even sold on the used market.

Same for those so-called "illegal" ten meter radios. Please notice the wording of the letter (which was sent from the FCC to the US Customs Service and not to you; thus is is only hearsay); they mention "importation and distribution" in a single phrase. Kindly show me where that could possibly include existing radios. I'd really appreciate it if you could, but you can't. They are referring to bringing in and retail selling new stock. Prove me wrong.

Existing radios are perfectly legal to possess and use by properly licensed amateurs on the ham band(s), and even to sell on the used market, just like those old cell-capable scanners are. It's > your < misinterpretation that's at fault here, and that misinterpretation is based strictly on wishful thinking.

Note that I am talking about ten meter radios (Uniden, Rangers, and RCIs), but even the so-called "export CBs" are perfectly legal for use by licensed amateurs on the ham bands that they cover. They are not legal (and never have been) for use on CB, of course.

So what's you're point? Why do you drag out a lame, old (and disproven) post and present it as something new? It's been taken apart by much more intelligent people than myself. Thus, it can only be that you (and your fellow akc members) are total idiots. Right?

To Any and All.
My trusty old cobra 2000 will not hold its frequency. It will lock onto lets say channel 11 27.0850 (as per the freq counter) and then when I key it up (barefoot, as I have no amp or anything) it quickly starts to count up!!! to 34.8850 and sticks there. There are no channel mods on this base, only a echo (which I seldom use)... everything else works fine... I have checked and when the freq changes,,, it does transmit at that freq.... if I power it down and then backup its right as rain and the freq counter shows the correct freq,,, until I key her up...

Anyone have any ideas???? I was thinking that it might be the MB8719 pll as there appears to be some black corrosion on the legs,, but I cant seem to find anyone selling an MB8719,....

Thanks in advance for any help or suggestions....

I opened up that Columbia charger, and it did have an approximately 1" cube transformer inside it. I think that they had to include a transformer because the battery contacts were so close to the surface.
The sticker on back said that the charger was built to a a certain UL standard, but it didn't say it was actually UL approved. However, it was CSA approved, which I've read is just as good. The charger had a 14 or 16-pin chip inside, but I didn't look at its markings to tell what it did.

go to the web site and look up under products. I work on the mps40, MPE150 and IEM, and MPE 7.5. The 150 loads mail on a convier run by a stepper motor then envelopes get feed into feeder. (stepper driven drive wheel and stepper driven retard wheel) about 10,000 per hour. it passes threw belts driven by 208 VAC motors threw a LVDT(linear voltage differntial transformer) for correct thickness and if ok it reaches 3 cutters lead edge, top and bottom. it this reacher a head with a suction cup that spits with anouther stepper and uses a manifold it grabs on side or the envelope and spins it and the other half temp goes into a forward then reverse clutch opperated path till the envelope is open. now a seloniod opperated gate fires the envelope into own path and releases fast enough to keep the contens going straight. the 2 paths have LVDT linear voltage differential transforms to check for correct thickness if everything is ok the envelope goes to trash and the check and dock pass then a braking system that seperates the check and dock its then images with cameras and a frame grabber board and a MIRC reader for correct orientation and passed the content through either a reversor, twister belt, and or delay path if needed. The contents is then justified again then hits the IEM (image export modual) then it again is imageded and the mirc line is read and this info is sent over a network to a collector. Pretty complex stuff . The MPS 40 is far more impressive but it is only a sorter and doesnt extract. I Trouble shoot, repair, improve every inch of these machines down to componet level on relay boards that fire seloniod gates and stepper boards , main controll boars and hub boards. there is quite a bit of computer programming involved and even more machanical to these machines. This includes replacing shaft/bearing asseblies, belt tentions, worn pullys. I hope this helps. Oh yeah the pay is VERY well and I physically work about an hour or 2 day and get payed the rest of the day to sit around. If i left out anything you need to know dont hesitate to ask!

I have 2 FRS radios that the wife and I use so I don't get lose at flea markets. I plan on taking them. Does anyone monitor any FRS frequencies on the highways? I also have a VX5R 2 meter radio that will be with me. I was thinking CB to listen to the truckers and get highway information. thanks for your help.

Skippp, do you have any pages showing or describing the hairpin match, or some other matching circuits suitable for 5/8 or .64 wave antennas?

Find a Big Lots store, if they still have them, you can get a Panasonic charger with 4 1950 mAh NiMh AA batteries for $9.99. I grabbed up three at that price. One set became a BP-180 for my Trunktracker. The other 2 sets are being used for my digital camera.

It was so nice out before. Got back home as the rain started. I may be able to go back out in an hour. Flash!!! Crash!!! Boom!!! Can I catch some lightening with my camera...

The frequency synthesizer is losing it's lock. The circuit needs to be checked for faults ('circuit' = VCO, crystal, bypass caps, etc, not just the chip), then readjusted by a competent tech.

oh so he lied to us huh??? why am i not surprised.....he seems to have this incredible compunction to be a big strapper(therefore, i must conclude he has a small penile erectile gland). i even saw one time he was advertizing wanting to buy a 10k amp.....the schumck.....and also i find it interesting how he wants to be respected by those ignorant black people on channel 6.....whatever.....what a life, what a deal, what a legacy.....only in america.....i always found it strange that white guys ran around trying to sound black.....his neighbors must hate him....imagine having to listen to that shit coming across your stereo, tv and phones, a half mile away, and don't even tell me it doesn't happen because it does and we all know it.....so let's just cut the crap shall we???.....talk to the hand on that.....i mean.....what's up with this???????? does this pinhead even have a

Depends on who you are. If you are some poor schmuck that's barely surviving by rummaging through garbage in Central America, this is the land of milk and honey and streets of gold. But if you are some poor schmuck barely surviving by rummaging through garbage in New York or Chicago, this country ain't so hot.

Yep. Arkansas is in a state of poverty, and Florida is in a state of confusion after every election. Both sound like third-world countries to me.

Yes, there is a transformer inside. There is also a printed circuit board with an IC, a few transistors, and a few resistors. I have not pursued the matter any farther than that. It appears well enough put together.

Anywhere on the body, frame or chassis, just as long as it's metal. The rear bumper is a good place for a long whip. Avoid mounting to any hinged part, such as a door or those spare tire thingamajigs.

>2. should I trim coax length to lower my swr?

No.

>3. my neighbor is complaining he can hear me on his TV and I am only >running a 4 pill whose fault is it?

Your's.

>4. where do I get the manual for (fill in the blank) radio?

From [fill in the blank]'s support department. If they are out of business or if they don't provide support, use Google or Alta-Vista and search the net. If it's an older radio you can also try to find the Sams manual for your radio, most of which can be found on eBay -- just keep checking. You can also post your request to this newsgroup in hopes that someone will give or sell you a copy.

A radio operator that claims to be a CBer but operates illegally, either by operating on channels outside of the Citizen's Band or by using an RF amplifier to boost his signal, or both. A keyclown is not only disrespectful of federal laws, but of other CBers that he may be jamming. Keyclowns don't care that the signal from an amp covers much more area than a legal CB, preventing legal operators in that area from using that channel. In fact, many of them actually enjoy causing interference to other CBers, which they call "stepping on the mud-ducks". Often the interference covers several channels because the amp is "bleeding", a condition caused by poor equipment and careless operation. Some keyclowns run radios modified for more power, but frequently cause the same kind of interference that is caused by RF amplifiers.

CB radio is a band that is intended to be shared by anyone wishing to use it, not dominated by a few blowhards that think one must earn the right by being louder than everybody else. Those people are keyclowns.

>6. I am going to a remote area and need emergency communication it >should cover 100 miles which cb do I buy?

If you are preparing for a possible emergency situation, you should ALWAYS remember that someone needs to be listening on the other end. CB radio is only reliable for a few miles (if that far), so don't expect for anyone to hear you 100 miles away. Even on the remote chance that someone CAN hear you, you don't know if the person listening is friend or foe (the easiest way for a woman to get raped is to park on a remote highway and radio for help on channel 9).

If you are going to prepare for an emergency, use a method of communication where you can be sure of making contact, and with the right person. You might check the area ahead of time for cell-phone coverage. If you are even more remote than that, rent a satellite phone. Also, let someone know where you are going and when you expect to return. If you are going to be moving around a lot, leave clues marking the direction you are headed. Basic survival stuff, but also a form of communication, and one that most people don't think about until it's too late.

>7. how do I hook up a amp to my frs radio?

You don't. And it's not a smart idea to try, because power at that frequency can do some real damage to your body, especially your eyes.

>8. whats the mod to get extra channels in my (fill in the blank) radio?

It is illegal to modify your radio for 'extra channels', or for more power than is allowed.

>9. wilson or firestick?

The 9-foot stainless-steel whip is the best. Anything shorter is less efficient, and the shortest antennas (sometimes called "rubber ducks") won't give you much range at all. Everything inbetween is a compromise between length, brand, price, appearance and frills.

>10. theres no sound when I turn on my radio whats wrong?

If the radio doesn't light up:

Either the radio isn't getting any power or the radio is broke. Check the fuse first -- make sure it is the proper fuse for your radio, and that it's good (NEVER run your radio WITHOUT the proper fuse -- it's there to protect your radio!). Then use a voltmeter or auto test-light to check for power on the wires as close to the radio as possible. If you have power to the radio and the lights still don't come on, your radio is broke.

If the lights come on:

1. make sure the microphone is plugged in
2. turn down the squelch all the way
3. turn up the volume
4. turn up the RF gain (if your radio has one)
5. make sure the PA/CB switch is set to CB
6. switch off the ANL and/or NB

If that doesn't work, check the back of the radio and make sure that there is nothing stuffed in the external speaker jack. Then remove the coax and use a tester probe for a quick-n-dirty antenna (the banana plugs on tester probes will fit right into the hole of the antenna connector on your radio, but NEVER use a tester probe to transmit!). If you finally get noise from your radio then either your antenna or coax is bad. If you still don't hear anything, your radio is broke. Take the radio (WITH the microphone) to a repair shop.

Your better off going to somewhere like cbtricks.com or defpom. You will get a better response and a more honest response. This is mainly a group of clowns, not all, but a whole lot.

email me if you want defpoms website, if not just go to google and enter defpom. It'll get you there.

Frank, that list was kind of a joke but your answers are so good I think it should be the new FAQ or at least be included in the one Eitner has up.

Thank you, but Eitner will never post anything he can't claim to know himself.
So, for the sake of the FAQ, I will hereby allow Bill to take credit for anything I said, past or present, that he may choose to include in the FAQ.
Meanwhile, I'm still working on a new FAQ, one that is more consistent with the true intentions of the Citizen's Band, that doesn't spam my own business, and that doesn't kiss keyclown ass.

BTW, I know that Twisty can't resist the urge to respond to this post, so to him/her I will post a pre-emptive "kiss my ass, get a life and a real name".

I think this was a topic here a couple years ago, and I think the consensus was that you need a dish over 100 feet in diameter. Maybe someone can verify that...

I agree gw. I just posted all of the info to help any others who might be approached by this idiot or be inclined to answer a post that might sound to good to be true. This guy will poke his head up again soon I'm sure. He needs the money to support his dope habit (he is a regular in the alt.drugs.pot group and likes to grow his own). He also claims to have a 230 acre "farm" in the area. Perhaps some truth has leaked out in his posts.

Hello Scott:

Great web sites. When Vanderberg AFB launches Rockets, theres quit a following of "Radio Enthusiasts" that track the Launch Schedule so that VHF and UHF signals can be bounced off the Ionizioned Vapor Trail.

Here in Southern California you will see the guys in Jeeps and other 4 wheel drive trucks and vehicles, up in the mountains and clear areas with Beam Antennas set up to bounce their signals off the Rocket Vapor Trails. Quit a site in deed. Mountain Tops, or just a camp out here in the Mojave Desert. It quit a thing to see all the different type of beams, and installations on and in all the differnt vehicles.

One of the all time greats, real eye catchers was a Chevy Truck with a 2 meter beam longer than the truck, that had to be rotated to the length of the vehicle in order to be driven.

I also think there is a web page somewhere, that has all the Poop on this, but I am at loss for it just right now.

Jay in the Mojave, Rockin & Rollin in the Mojave Desert, not to far a stretch from Miss Dinaha's Fillin Station.

Nothing? On their web site they say using a GP antenna as a NGP will fry your radio, cause frogs to mutate, ect. Do fiberglass type antennas need to be earth grounded?

Yea, I have noticed a hotbed of media activity surrounding the Canadian/US border...all kinds of weird things happening there. And here I thought those kind of things were only occurring along the southern part of the US, but it appears some of them Texas landowners over yonder have taken matters into their own hands.

MnMikew,
If you have a 'no groundplane' antenna it doesn't need a groundplane to work, right? So, there would be nothing to convert. Unless an antenna is meant to be ground mounted, it usually has it's own 'ground' or counterpoise, so doesn't need to be grounded for RF purposes, (but it may need to be grounded for safety reasons, though). If you remove the 'groundplane' from an antenna that uses one, you are only using half of an antenna (doesnt really matter if it's a fibreglass antenna or a metal one). It won't work very well at all.
I don't know about 'frying' your radio, though.
If you believe the rest of their claims, I don't see any reason to 'baulk' about mutating frogs...

To learn the technical TRUTH about CB Radio without all the hype from people who are just plain ignorant, check out the following books from CBC International. They're selling right now at a big discounts on our EBAY & AMAZON stores too.

Check it out!

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

For details on our Galaxy-Ranger Service Manual (2nd Ed.) go to:

Just what do you think "(USMC Ret.)" means? That's the common abbreviation for 'retired' when referring to military status. And your referenced post proves that I wasn't the first person to use the term, but I -was- the first one to deny it. So thanks for posting it, Twist, you just proved my case and slammed your own fingers in the door! Idiot.

For what it is worth, if you have one of those old 12 foot satellite dishes, you just might get a bit of gain from it on FRS frequencies (450 MHz). The problem is that a dish has to be many wavelengths in size to start providing gain. At 27 MHz (11 meters), the size of the dish would be so great that you'd likely have to rotate your whole state (unless you live in Texas, then you'd only have to rotate your whole county). :). Seriously, dishes only start to become practical when you approach Gigahertz frequencies.

He sent me an email a couple weeks ago telling me that he's still reading this group. Keyclowns: Be afraid. Be very afraid.

That almost sounds like the etiquette below that you wrote the other day....

>But if you really want him >back I can drop him an email telling how his >admirers are at home and lonely on a >Saturday night begging for an encore >appearance. Well?

And that is very similar in nature to what KC8LDO threatened the group with.....he claimed he could contact N8 and have him bring back the pornographical spamming. You lids need find another manner in which to amuse yourselves.......cb cracked y'all.

Thank you, Steve. Having long since killfiled Lennie, I would not otherwise get to see the comment.
1. I do not deny my reply.
2. The reply from twistedhed is a Leland Scott forgery.
3. The original from Train may well be.

Excellent buy. Have you ever been to an Ollie's Bargain Outlet?
There's one in Frederick and in Hagerstown. I believe there's one closer to Baltimore than either of those as well. It's sort of like a Big Lots, but I think it has better stuff.

A year and a half ago, I went to a lot of trouble to mount a CB in my car. I was headed up to Pennsylvania to go snowboarding, and I wanted to hear about traffic conditions on I-270 and I-70. I listened to the CB for about 15 minutes and then turned it off. It was nothing but mindless jabber. I'm sure there's lots of potential to CB, but that potential is not always realized.

As for the "does anyone monitor FRS" question: every thing that is broadcast is listened to by somebody. Count on about a half-mile range, tops, with FRS. GMRS, MURS: I have no experience with those. Monitoring the state troopers or communicating via the Yaesu may prove more productive than any other technique.

Best wishes.

Car to car FRS works as good as CB HT's with stock antennas.

Certainly quieter and more friendly. I still use my CB, when then skip dies down...

thanks so much for stating the obvious.....

It was of little or no help....

So as I had expected.... there are no real techs here...

BTW the issue was with the on/off power switch. It had gone very high in resistance. The resistance, although low enough to appear to turn on the radio, did not allow the proper voltage to get to ground (yes ground as this radio switches the ground in and out, not the positive!!) .,... bottom line is that the radio now works with out a problem, the freq counter, which once in a while gave funny stuff,,, now works great... so thanks......

Bob

Well, instead of fretting about the best antenna to buy for the money, I recommend building one yourself. It's cheaper and more fun. I built a coaxial dipole myself:

http://www.aimcomm.com/sparky/rad12.htm

There are jillions of sites on how to build your own antenna. Maybe someone can post a few good links. I recommend a trip to your public library and start with the ARRL manuals.

I just bought the Cobra Handheld 'Roadtrip' version, which includes a magmount antenna for a whopping extra 3 dollars. I'm sure it's not the best performer, but I didn't want to mount anything inside the vehicle. It does have an alternator noise issue, but it works. I can hear truckers warning of accidents/cops/etc ahead, and the truckers are able to hear me, for at least 2-3 miles.

You can see the radio here:

No need to get pissy. The symptom you described could have been caused by a large number of possibilities, and without actually having the radio on the bench there is not much else anyone can tell you. Do you think this is some sort of techno-psychic hotline? Like we can somehow establish a psychic connection with your radio and divine the problem just because you post here? Get real.

>BTW the issue was with the on/off power switch. It had gone very high in >resistance. The resistance, although low enough to appear to turn on the >radio, did not allow the proper voltage to get to ground (yes ground as this >radio switches the ground in and out, not the positive!!)

For starters, you don't put voltage on ground. Ground is the reference by which other voltages are measured. If the radio switches the negative or the positive, it doesn't really matter cause the same voltage is applied across the radio regardless.

Now do you want an intensive technical analysis based on this new information you have provided? Even though the problem was a dirty power switch, that was enough to indicate a problem -- the fact that your freq freaked means that your radio isn't very immune to power fluctuations. This may be the result of:

1) a weak internal filter or bypass cap; or
2) a current draw in excess of the ratings of the power switch, or of the filtering capabilities of the internal filter cap, or both, which could be caused by:
a) overvolting the radio and/or poor power supply regulation. (This can also lead to the stressing, weakening and premature failure of many components; it can also delinearize and/or deregulate the VCO control voltage, PLL reference voltage, and destabilize the reference oscillator);
b) the normal failure of a component, possibly a semiconductor on it's way to shorting out, or even the filter cap in the process of cooking it's electrolyte;
c) cranking up the output power too high;
d) modifying the radio for 'talkback', which makes the audio amp work twice as hard than in receive, and is summed with the power drawn by the RF amp;
e) an auxilliary device powered from a tap in the radio after the power switch/filter cap;
f) any combination of the above.

A tech's job is to locate and repair not just the failure, but the underlying fault that caused the failure, as well as any other possible damage done by the fault. We don't just squirt some contact cleaner and call it a fix. You want some intensive tech work? Don't ask for it on the internet. What I provided in my previous post was about the best anyone could have done, and you should consider yourself lucky to get THAT much in THIS newsgroup.

I stumbled into one by accident last February.

Traffic on I-270 was so bad that I gave up on going snowboarding. I decided to hit the Frederick MD Radio Shacks in search of discontinued shortwave radios instead. I went to the RS on the north side of town and then headed off looking for the Radio Shack at the western side of Frederick. Pulling into the lot, I saw this Ollie's Bargain Outlet thing, asked myself "what's this?" and figured I ought to see what's inside.

The first thing I saw was shelf after shelf after shelf full of Haynes Manuals, which you may know about if you do any sort of automotive repair. They were priced at something like $2 or $3 each. I was floored. Ollie's must have bought the stock left over after Trak Auto went out of business. I ended up buying a made-in-the-USA Ridgid #4 Philips screwdriver, a few car manuals, and some junk food. I had the free coffee, found the Radio Shack in the adjacent shopping mall (no discontinued shortwave radios in stock) and dined at the Subway. A charming evening was capped by a trip to a nearby secondhand book store.

All in all, it was a delightful evening.

Careful Randy, I pointed out the same thing and he threatened to be "all over my posts". other words, troll. I did see though he gave some great answers on antenna questions in other posts.

Hi folks,

When I was a kid in the 70's I had a fascination with cb's and short wave.

I've had a renewed interest over the past few years and would like to gradually explore it again.

A first question that occured to me; why not use CB's over the cell phones? Seems way cheaper and far more ideal, if one's willing to sacrifice privacy.

A local radio show broadcasts on short wave...are there frequencies generally dedicated to these kinds of things? Do AM stations correspond to specific frequencies readily available on short wave? (I'm suspecting they're one in the same).

I've seen the wide range of freqencies available to short wave enthusists (sp)...can someone post a link or other describing what frequencies are allotted to what?

And is licensing neccessary for cb or short wave communications? And if so, why?

Thanks.

Saw this post the other day and was interested to see the results.I nearly posted a disagreement on Franks remark about the out of lock condition as that did not make sense, since you said the radio would transmit. I had a similar problem with my cobra 2000 with the on/off switch not working at all., which I fixed.Yes its a interesting ground switch which feeds the main pcb ground and the freq counter pcb ground via the clock/counter switch. the clock ground is connected to the powersupply ground permanently.That's why the counter reverts to clock in off position.I thinks the bad resistance has messed with the oscillation mixing with the output through L20 triple coil ~35 mhz here being the winner. Interesting post and though you feel let down here, it spurred you to think harder about the problem and gave us all a share of your experience. If you want the refined npc mod (includes an612 mod) which I have developed along with other stuff, give me a email and I can give you a webpage link of my work as well.

cheers

In the UK, you can buy ground plane kits for mobile antennas used for base stations.
They consist of a metal plate, with a hole in the centre and 4 radials. You use a stud mount through the middle and any mobile antenna you wish.

Why do you think CB is more ideal than a cell phone? Explain.

Twistedhed:

You have stated that I am at least four different people (KC8LDO, KI5GY, KC7UIP, and N7VCF). It is absolutely impossible for me to be any more than one person. Therefore, at least three of those statements must be false. If a statement is false, whether by intent or by accident, it is impossible for it to be true. Later, you stated that you have always spoken the truth. As proven above, at least three of your prior statements were false. Therefore, it is absolutely impossible for your statement (to have always spoken the truth) to be true, and must necessarily be false. And because your statement (about having always spoken the truth) was made with knowledge of the falsehood of your previous statements, it is absolutely impossible that the latter statement was false by accident. The conclusion is simple, Twisty -- you are a liar.

Checkmate.
